THREE DEAD IN EXPLOSION

DRIVEN OFF BOATS, SAY SURVIVORS

QUEBEC, June 1.—Victor Van Coster, a young Belgian, flatly charged in an interview with an AMERICAN representative here today that after the Empress of Ireland sank, and when he tried to climb into a boat full of men, which was pulling away from the ship, one of them—a sailor—kicked him back into the water.

Van Coster declares that the sailors made no attempt to guide passengers to the boats before the liner sank; that they piled into the boats themselves, without even looks for their pars, and that they thought not of the passengers, but only of their own safety.

Abraham Heller of Toronto charged today that the sailors fought among themselves for places in the boats. He said he saw sailors crowd into the first boat launched, in which he himself was seated. Afterward, when the boat was afloat, he helped a man into the boat from the water, and the man—one of the Empress' crew—swore at his comrades in the boat for trying to leave him to drown.

He charged that one hundred could were in it.
have held twenty more persons than EVIDENCE OF COWARDICE.

Other survivors are united in the assertion that the crew of the wrecked Empress packed solidly the first two lifeboats that were launched. The survivors say these men simply disregarded the calls of passengers—men and women—left on the heeling ship. Other cases where sailors pushed back men who tried to board the boats are given.

Evidence of this sort is piling up—evidence that a horror of cowardice and of evaded duty even eclipsed the horror of the wreck. As a result, the investigation to be conducted by the government will be the most searching ever conducted in Canada. Captain Kendall of the sunken liner and Captain Anderson of the collier Storstad will be the principal witnesses.

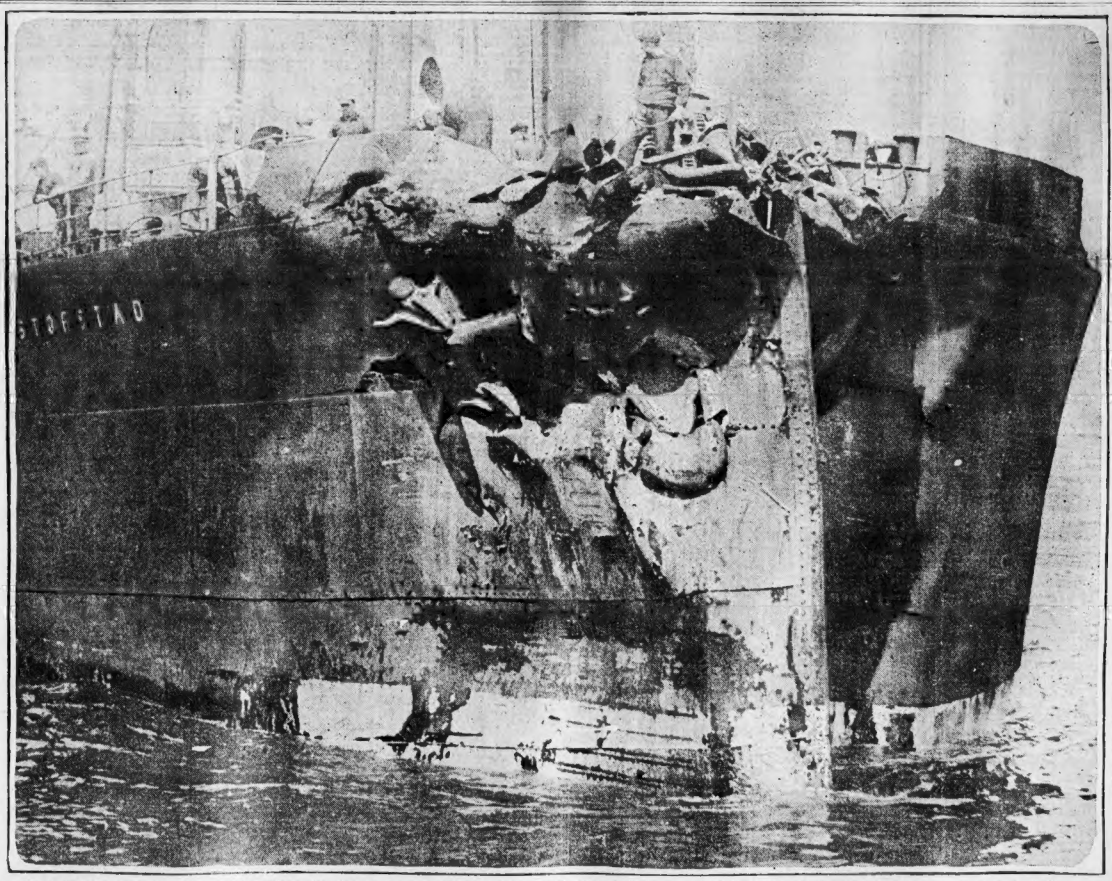
CAUSE OF EMPRESS OF IRELAND HORROR



First photograph of the collier Storstad, taken after the sea tragedy, showing twisted and battered steel prow which tore through the sides of the Empress of Ireland like a knife, killing passengers as they peacefully slept in their berths and sending the staunch liner to the bottom of the St. Lawrence in ten minutes. E. BOSTON PUMPING STATION BLOWS UP

DEAD 3
MISSING 1
INJURED 8

A terrific explosion of sewer gas in the screen house of the Metropolitan Sewage Pumping Station on Chelsea street, East Boston, snatched away three lives today, shook the entire Noddle Island district and did damage close to $100,000.

Besides the three dead, one man is missing and eight were injured. Of the eight injured four are on the dangerous list and may die.

The explosion completely demolished the screen house, a structure 25 by 40 feet, built of brick and steel. The main building of the plant was shaken and rent. Great pumping engines were put out of commission, and the sewage disposal system of a large part of the metropolitan district was temporarily out of commission.

The police put the damage at $100,000. The authorities at the plant say $60,000.

BLOWN 75 FEET.

The blast was felt half a mile away—heard a mile. Bricks and debris rained for a hundred yards about. One man on Chelsea bridge was struck in the mouth by a flying brick. Martin Devereaux, who was at work in the screenhouse, was blown seventy-five feet and instantly killed.

Michael Crowley, an employe of the plant, is missing. It is feared he was buried under the ruins of the screen house, and workmen set to clear away the debris and seek his body.

The complete list of dead, missing and injured is as follows:

THE DEAD.

DEVEREAUX, MICHAEL, No. 1 Church place, Roxbury. Blown seventy-five feet and instantly killed.

BUTLER, THOMAS, No. 36 Morris street, East Boston. Married. Thirty-three years old. Died at East Boston Relief Hospital of a compound fracture of the pelvis.

GROARK, JAMES, forty-eight. Married. No. 37 Calumet street, Roxbury. Burns and deep scalp

Declare Collier Under Manned; Only 12 in Crew

MONTREAL, June 1.—Charges that the collier Storstad was under manned at the time of the collision with the liner Empress of Ireland were made today and will be investigated by Canadian officials.

The charges were based on the statement of stokers, who declared that the collier had only twelve men, including the captain and three mates, and that the Storstad was able to send out only one of her lifeboats.

MANIAC RUNS AMUCK ON CANOPIC AND KILLS TWO

The White Star liner Canopic, which docked today in Boston and on which Cardinal O'Connell sailed for Rome five weeks ago, brought in the news of a double murder in the steerage on the trip to Italy, and a dramatic story of how Monsignor Splaine, rector of the Cathedral, who accompanied the Cardinal, had quelled an uprising of angry passengers who wanted to lynch the slayer.

The shooting occurred on the evening of May 7. At the time Cardinal O'Connell suffered from an attack of influenza and was in his stateroom.

Monsignor Splaine was conversing with Purser W. James O'Hagan in the latter's office. Suddenly a whitefaced steward put his head in at the door and excitedly exclaimed:

"A man's run amuck down in the steerage with a revolver and he has shot two already!"

Both the Monsignor and O'Hagan ran out, summoning Captain Kelk and Chief Officer Raby.

"One of the men is dying, Monsignor," the rector was told. The Monsignor left the others and went down to administer the last rites of the church to the dying man.

Kelk and Raby opened the door into the steerage.

Bang, and a bullet tore a button from the purser's coat.

Bang, and a second bullet tore through the sleeve of the purser's coat.

Kelk and Raby shut the door and summoned a seaman with a hose. The nozzle was stuck in a skylight over the compartment. A fusillade of shots greeted the stream of water. Finally the man firing the weapon was drenched and cornered. Into the door again burst Raby.

EXPECT SECOND ARREST IN PEASLEE MYSTERY

HENNIKER, N. H., June 1.—Another arrest is momentarily expected in the Peaslee murder case. This arrest may mean the freeing of Eugene A. Wood, who is awaiting trial on the charge of having murdered the wealthy toymaker, Howard W. Peaslee.

Morrison and Shirley Peaslee, sons of the murder victim, were questioned last night and today by the selectmen and Detective C. B. Hildreth of Manchester. This afternoon Hildreth suddenly left town. It was understood that the sons had been asked the details of their conversation at the Peaslee home after the crime had been discovered.

Much depends upon the exact time the shot was fired that killed Peaslee.

Two persons today positively say that the time of the shooting was not more than a minute before the 9 o'clock whistle blew the night of May 22, when Peaslee was killed.

MEDIATORS BAR OUT CARRANZA

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., June 1.—The A-B-C mediators have refused to permit Carranza to enter their councils. In so doing they threw down the gauntlet to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan.

In a long conversation with the mediators, Justice Lamar and Frederick W. Lehman, the American delegates, urged Carranza's cause.

In espousing Carranza the American delegates acted under instructions from Washington. Mr. Wilson and Bryan were at the other end of the wire directing everything.

Senors DaGama, Naon and Suarez, the arbitrators of Mexico's fate, answered most politely but most emphatically that Carranza was impossible.

Carranza was impossible, they continued, because he is still fighting and intending to continue the fight to the finish. How was it possible, they asked, for Carranza delegates to come and talk peace when Carranza soldiers were waging bloody war? There was no way open for Carranza unless he hoisted the flag of truce and this he refused to do.

Carranza was impossible also, they said, because there was grave doubt whether he could guarantee an armistice, even if he would, was he able to restrain the tartar Villa? They asked: Could he hold back troops that were flushed with victory and eager for more of the spoils of war?

So firm were the arbitrators that Justice Lamar and Mr. Lehman agreed to submit the whole situation again to Washington.

The American delegates received a long cipher dispatch direct from President Wilson early this forenoon that was reported to have to do with the requests of the Constitutionalists that they be allowed to participate in the negotiations without halting their campaign against Huerta.

This message was of such length that it was expected several hour would elapse before it could be translated.

The Mexican delegates were anxiously awaiting word from Huerta as to the attitude that he would take on the proposals outlined to him in dispatches sent several days ago. The continued silence of the Mexican dictator was regarded as a menace to the success of the conference.

TWO BRIGADES READY TO JOIN VILLA'S ARMY NEARING ZACATECAS

TORREON, Mex., June 1.—The brigades of Generals Hernandez and Herrera have arrived here, and today are being equipped with clothing and ammunition before going south to join the main portion of General Villa's army, which is pushing toward Zacatecas.

General Villa said today that he had about 4,000,000 rounds of ammunition for his army, but that he would need at least twice as much before he concluded his campaign with the capture of the capital.

CARRANZA PLANS TO PROCLAIM SELF MEXICAN PRESIDENT

JUAREZ, Mex., June 1.—General Carranza, upon reaching Saltillo, will proclaim himself the Provisional President of Mexico, make the city his capital for the time being and announce the personnel of his provisional Cabinet. The purpose of Carranza's move is declared to forestall the action of the Niagara Fall mediators in naming a governing body for Mexico.

Carranza's selections are declared to meet with the approval of General Villa. General Pablo Gonzales, who captured Monterey and took part also in the capture of Tampico, is reported en route from Monterey to Saltillo with a force of 5,000 men to guard the provision capital.

Men at Vera Cruz Copy Mutt and Jeff

VERA CRUZ, June 1.—One bright spot in the weary watchful waiting is the arrival of a burro carload of New York and Boston papers every mail day. Launches hurry them to every steamer and warship in the harbor. The AMERICAN'S pictures are the talk of all the sailors.

Idle hands find something to do in copying the Mutt and Jeff adventures and the cartoons. The men are able to follow the narrative of the Perils of Pauline. The pictures taken from flying boats, showing all the surroundings of the harbor are posted up for instant reference.

ANCIENTS AT DRUMHEAD ON THE COMMON

The Ancients and Honorables held their annual election today over the drumhead on Boston Common.

This year for the first time was omitted the time-honored ceremony of sending out a fife and drum corps to rouse the members of the company to their day's duty.

The first exercise of the day was performed by Captain Fred E. Bolton and a little group of officers, who went to King's Chapel Burying Ground and laid a wreath on the tomb of Captain Robert Keayne, the first commander of the regiment.

The Ancients assembled in Faneuil Hall armory for luncheon, thence marched to the Old South Church in the Back Bay for the commemorative exercises. Joe Mitchell Chapple read the ode; and the Rev. Morris Ambrose Levy of Brooklyn delivered the sermon. Thence the march led to the Common for the drumhead section, where the company was reviewed by Governor Walsh and staff. A banquet at the Copley-Plaza this evening will close the exercises.

Among the guests who had promised to attend were Governor Walsh, Governor Pothier of Rhode Island, Mayor Curley, Secretary of State Frank J. Donahue, Congressmen Murray and Gallivan, Calvin Coolidge and others.

The dead are: John Mouchech, Raymond Tinney and John Murphy. The saved are: George German, Sarah German, Mary German and John Nevill.

Peace in 12 Million Colorado Mine War Still Far Distant

DENVER, June 1.—There is no more prospect of a settlement of the strike in the Colorado coal fields than there was several weeks ago, according to statements by both union officials and mine operators today.

Sixty-six persons are known to have been killed and forty-eight wounded in the numerous battles and disorders since the miners went on strike on September 23, 1913. The cost of the eight months' industrial conflict is variously estimated at $12,000,000.

He is at the Quincy Hospital with a fracture at the base of the skull and his name is on the dangerous list. The automobile was driven by John J. Galvin of No. 24 Hewins street, Dorchester.

ROMANCE AND PATHOS SHOWN IN HAAS' DEATH

From sudden riches to poverty and then—suicide, is the tale of romance and pathos written into the life of William Frederick Haas, the man who invented the famous Goodyear welt shoe machinery.

Haas amassed a fortune from his royalties, gambled it away and then crept into the loft of an old Hartford barn and hanged himself to a rafter. He was eighty-one years old and of all his former possessions not a dollar remained even as a bequest to relatives who cared for him during his last years.

Haas once bore a world-wide reputation as the richest and most skilful inventive genius in New England, but he lived to squander all he made and finally to be driven to subsist upon the kindness of his sons. Living apart from his wife and children for more than a score of years, years of opulence, money ran through his fingers as water through a sieve. Finally broken, he turned first to one son and then to the other.

AN EPOCH MAKER.

Haas was an epoch maker. The Goodyear welt machines, which he invented, cut the cost of shoes from $6 to $3.50, in what seemed to the manufacturers an incredible short time. Like Watt and Stevenson, no problem of mechanics was too perplexing for Haas' marvelous insight.

One day in his later years he met an old friend, a printer, on a street corner in Worcester.

"Haas, I'm put to it," said the printer.

"What's the trouble?" inquired Haas.

"I've had the best men I could hire come in and look at my press and not one of 'em can discover what's the matter. Business is at a standstill until I can get the job done."

"I'll fix it," said Haas confidently, though he had never set eyes on a printing press. The next day he appeared at the printer's shop and in thirty minutes had discovered the trouble and repaired it.

HAAS SELDOM WORRIED.

His working life was a succession of surprises to others—not to Haas. He always took himself philosophically—seldom worried.

Haas came from Wurtemburg, Germany, when a boy of eight. His parents and brothers and sister came, too, and he was apprenticed in Shrewsbury. Haas senior was a Civil War veteran.

Haas junior, fresh from the Worcester public schools, went to work in a Worcester machine shop. In a few years his wages had been increased by leaps and bounds. Skilled English mechanics, whose training in the old country had fitted them for the most complicated work, regarded the boy Haas with amazement.

No sooner did he look at a new machine than he knew it from the skids up. A little study of the workings and he had improvement suggestions to offer. From unfolding these suggestions Haas' companions turned to marvelling as they saw the youth make good one by one his ideas.

COLE TO PUT STATE'S TROOPS ON ARMY BASIS

General Charles H. Cole, chairman of the old Boston Police Commission, former Fire Commissioner and now the State's new Adjutant General—"the man behind the M. V. M. guns"—says he plans to put the militia on a regular army footing, as nearly as he can.

"The Massachusetts militia is all right," he said when asked to outline his plans. "I intend to put it on a basis as near that of the regular army as possible. We must remember always, however, that the Commonwealth owns $6,000,000 worth of militia property and we spend every year nearly $700,000."

General Cole doesn't intend to make any very radical changes in his department but will buckle right down to the routine until he gets all the details running smoothly.

"You know when a fellow works the hardest and has the most work to do he is the happiest," he said, and that is his idea of what his job means.

Speaking of his military experiences, General Cole said he accepted a colonelcy on the staff of Governor Douglas with an idea of leaving the militia when the term of detail expired.

"I didn't do all I intended," he said, "for inside of six months after I retired from the colonelcy I enlisted as private in the cadets and drilled as a private with service stripes all over my sleeves."

General Cole has been twenty-four years in the Massachusetts militia. He is one of the best known officers in the State and has a high standing with the army officers at Washington.

FIREMEN INJURED BY AUTO

Fire early today destroyed the three and a half story warehouse of the A. H. Howes Pottery Company at Haywood street and Crescent avenue, Cambridge.

The brick stable connected with the warehouse was partially destroyed. From the stable fifteen horses were rescued.

The fire threatened neighboring tenement houses and badly scorched one. Five families were driven from their tenements to the street and a score were thoroughly frightened.

The burning warehouse occupied the centre of a nest of wooden buildings. These were in danger when the warehouse quickly became a furnace.

The property loss will reach $10,000. The presence of three fires, all burning briskly in different parts of the warehouse when the first firemen arrived, convinces both police and fire men that a firebug was at work. Three alarms were sounded.

Assistant Chief Casey and his driver, James Clifford, were upset from their auto while responding to the second alarm and badly injured. Clifford is at the Cambridge Hospital with a fractured leg, and Assistant Casey was badly bruised. The auto, a new one just been put into service, skidded and upset at Lakeview and Huron avenues. The auto struck a telephone pole as it upset and was completely wrecked.

Almost the entire fire force of Cambridge was called into service to check the blaze.

Mrs. Helen Ballou, who occupies a tenement near the warehouse, was awakened early by the light of flames that shot from the warehouse barely six feet away. Rousing her husband an alarm was immediately sounded. Before the firemen arrived, the flames were soaring through the roof. Fire showed itself in the stable and in a remote section of the warehouse. Mrs. Ballou fled to the street as did the families of Paul Babbin and Mrs. McConlog, dwellers in a neighboring house. This house was damaged by the flames.

The excelsior used in the packing of pottery and the wooden boxes gave the flames rich fuel. In a remarkable brief space of time the whole structure was doomed. Firemen and neighbors rescued fourteen horses from the stable, but the stable was burned. The fierce heat made the work of fighting the fire difficult. All the walls of the warehouse fell in about 4 o'clock, leaving only heaps of twisted steel and piles of red hot brick of what had been a substantial structure.

Two Little Girls to Help Run Horse Show

Two very important members of the horse show committee for the country fair which the Brighthelmstone Club is to hold, June 4, 5 and 6, on the old Allston golf grounds, are Miss Grace E. Cummings, eight-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank E. Cummings of Newton, and Miss Eleanor Dowling, five, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. P. E. J. Dowling of Allston.

Their appointments on this committee are rewards for the active services they rendered during the days of preparation. Little Miss Cummings was an ardent supporter of the campaign for program advertising. An unusually fine souvenir program of nearly 100 pages has been issued. Miss Dowling was the competent social secretary to a very busy chairman.

Two-Day Cycle Run Without a Hitch

The Cyclecar Club of New England completed its first two-day run to Springfield, returning late yesterday, without a hitch in the program. Instead of finishing in Boston as was at first planned, the run ended at Concord, as many of the riders live north of Boston. The little cars created great interest all along the road, took the hills well, made good time, and finished on schedule. There were five laps in charge of President E. P. Blake, two Mercury cars in charge of A. E. Kenney, one Trumbull and a Dudley "Bug." A Scripps-Booth joined the run for a few miles at Fitchburg.

ALICE BROWN WINS THE AMES $10,000 PRIZE

The prize of $10,000 offered on March 21, 1912, by Winthrop Ames, proprietor of the Little and Booth theatres, New York, has been awarded to Miss Alice Brown of Boston, a novelist and short-story writer, of New England life and types. The cash prize of $10,000 has already been paid to her, and her play "Children of Earth" is in preparation for production early next season, probably at the Booth theatre.

The authors of the 1,646 manuscripts, which were examined by the judges—among them some of the best-known native dramatists—will be chagrined to learn that the rich literary trophy was won by a writer who has never been conspicuous in the theatre. Miss Brown has occasionally written short one-act sketches that have been staged, but her reputation rests entirely upon narrative fiction.

The prize winning drama is a play of humble, rural New England types concerned in a dramatic plot of every-day life. Yet the merits of Miss Brown's drama were so evident, and its human appeals so general that the judges did not find great difficulty in reaching a unanimous decision. These judges were Augustus Thomas, president of the society of American Dramatists; Adolph Klauber, formerly dramatic critic of the Times, and Winthrop Ames.

Miss Brown, who suddenly finds herself conspicuous in the theatrical world, was born at Hampton Falls, N. H., in 1857. She gained her education at Robinson seminary, Exeter, N. H., from which she was graduated in 1876. Almost immediately she took up literary work. Her insight into New England character, and her knowledge of the life of which she was a part has been great factors in her success.

Her first book, "Meadow Grass," a collection of short stories, brought her immediate recognition. She has also published a volume of poems, a book of essays on travel, a great number of short stories that have first appeared in magazines and several ambitious novels. The best known of the latter are "The Story of Thyrza" and "Rose MacLeod."

Miss Brown has always been a lover of the farm life in which her early girlhood was spent. She lives in the old Whipple house in Pinckney street, which in the day of E. P. Whipple, who built it, was the gathering place of Boston literary folk of more than a generation ago.

40 COUPLES AT REGISTRAR'S ON FIRST OF JUNE

The June nuptial rush is on!

The first day of the merry month of marriages brought a record number of couples into the office of City Registrar McGlenen today at No. 100 Summer street. Long before the office had opened the corridors were filled with eager sweethearts, and by actual count eighty hearts which will soon beat as forty throbbed expectantly in line waiting for the chance to file wedding intentions.

After them came other couples, a seemingly unending procession to take the first step that leads to the altar. It kept up all afternoon so that "D. Cupid" McGlenen began to count by the day as a new record in his career as the official giver of marriage papers.

When the doors to his office finally swung open, there was something of a scrimmage to be the first to file intentions. The winners in the marriage marathon were two Syrians. They were Willie Ell, of Crystal Spring, N. H., and Marian Katuh of Syria.

There was an unusual romance. The couple said they had been married in Syria a year ago. Ell returned to America leaving his bride in his native land. A few days ago she arrived, told the immigration authorities at Long Wharf that she had lost her wedding certificate and was detained. As the couple did not have with them the proof of their marriage, a second ringing of the wedding bells was declared necessary.

The bride was dressed in the costume of a Syrian peasant woman. She is twenty-two. Ell is twenty-nine and said he had been divorced several years ago in North Dakota.

"We would like to marry right away so we can go West on our second honeymoon," Ell told the registrar.

So the law requiring them to wait five days was suspended and they were given a wedding license. Both then returned to Long Wharf to be married.

Gunman Shot by Policeman Dies at Beverly Hospital

Aisaro Dacinto, a laborer from the Italian colony of Beverly, died at the Beverley Hospital early today from a bullet wound inflicted by Policeman George H. Merrill. The policeman shot Dacinto after the young laborer had shot his chum, Tony Citioni, in a quarrel.

Dacinto, after a long chase, opened fire on the policeman with an automatic revolver. His shots went wild and a running gun fight followed. Bullets whistled by the policeman's head until a shot from Merrill stretched Dacinto in the road. Citioni will recover.

Sir Herbert Tree's Tribute to Irving

LONDON, June 1.—Sir Herbert Tree's tribute to Laurence Irving, the noted producer and actor, who was among those lost in the Empress of Ireland disaster, is as follows:

"We actors are proud of Laurence Irving in life, and are no less proud of him in death. There was always something fateful about his personality. One feels that his end is in tragic harmony with his being.

"Irving was an idealist, fearless of standing by his ideals in any company. He was a scholar in knowledge as in expression, and as an actor had already attained to a great height. His work, like the man, was always original."

An American Talk to Its Readers

"Your Feet Feature
The Facts About You

—Your Shoes Are a Tell-Tale"

So speaks Elbert Hubbard, who utters further forceful truths about footwear when he says:

¶ "Spiritless, dejected, whipped-out men advertise to the world their mental condition by their shoes. Hope, courage, animation, ambition are mirrored in footwear.

¶ "Once there were people in America who never wore shoes. Now we all do—or part of the time, at least. Americans are the best shod people on earth.

¶ "Our consumption of shoes is two hundred and seventy million pairs a year—three pairs to a person. Twenty-five years ago it was two pairs a year per person. We are getting more particular. Also as the years have passed our shoes have been bettered in style and quality. Most of us have different shoes for different occasions. It is better for our feet, and better for our heads, as it lifts our self respect. When you change your shoes you change your mind."

¶ Now comes a statistician who has figured out that we, of average activity, each walk 1,800 miles a year—more than half the distance across the North American continent. Sounds like an endurance contest, and, in a sense, it is. An endurance contest where feet and footwear are concerned.

¶ That's why it pays to be particular in the matter of shoe selection. That's why it profits one to follow shoe advertising. For it is advertising which is responsible for the present high standards of American shoe manufacturers.

¶ The manufacturers themselves have thrown the light of publicity on their product. They have taught the public what to seek and what to avoid in shoes. And, as a result, we have become—perhaps unconsciously—a shoe-wise nation.

¶ Few are there today who are without preference in shoe styles, "lasts" and leathers.

¶ Such is the educational force of advertising. And its power for good is equally apparent—for shoe knowledge means foot comfort, on which hinges peace of mind and body.

¶ American readers are sensitive to advertising's every appeal. They have not only the means but the inclination to satisfy the desires which advertising creates.

¶ And as the American successfully serves its shoe advertisers, so it lends strength to the advertising of scores of other worthy products. Careful and continuous reading of this advertising can be attended only with profit to the reader.

BRYAN GOES OUT WITH YODLERS AGAIN JULY 4

PHILADELPHIA, June 1.—Secretary Bryan is to be a Chautauqua lecturer again this year, and beginning July 4, in North Carolina, will make three speeches a day during the season from the platform.

Although no official announcement of Mr. Bryan's contract with the Pennsylvania Chautauqua Association has been made, it became known at a meeting of the board of directors of that organization, held in Swarthmore, that plans had been made to join the "talent" of the Summer circuit.

In addition to Mr. Bryan, Victor Murdock, ex-Governor Folk, ex-Governor Hadley, Senator La Follette, Miss Ben B. Lindsey and a number of other statesmen and politicians are being advertised in 160 towns in thirteen different States, with an array of musical talent, including bands, quartets, soloists and the much-lauded Tyrolean yodlers.

Chamber Committee in Report Opposes Lower Letter Rate

A committee of the Boston Chamber of Commerce appointed to consider the proposed reduction of first class letter postage from two cents to one cent in a report to the directors opposes the proposed plan, says today's Current Affairs, the official organ of the Chamber.

"The committee declares that the efficiency of the first class mail service would be impaired "to an intolerable degree if, by the use of the one cent stamp, the difference between that class and that portion of the third class carried in envelopes would be abolished." It appears to the committee, however, that it would be a benefit to increase the allowed weight of letter postage from one ounce to two ounces, as much business correspondence now exceeds the present weight limit.

President Murlin Scores City Life In Baccalaureate

"The City" was the subject of the baccalaureate sermon of President Lemuel H. Murlin of Boston University delivered in the New Old South Church. President Murlin depicted the deteriorating influences of municipality on home, school and church. Immigrants crowding our cities and city people taking to the country threaten danger in the future, declared President Murlin, as they bring evils today.

"So long as the country folk have the balance of power we will have less Tammany Halls, less Tim Sullivans and Bath House Johns. The saloon and the gambling den are growing in our cities, while churches are diminishing. Our safety lies with the country folk," he said.

Asks Commission for Unemployed

"At this moment there is just one adequate thing to do," said Morrison I. Swift in an address at the Franklin Union, "and that is to create an Unpaid Unemployed Commission to investigate our own conditions and the methods adopted in other countries, and to advise the next Legislature what measures to take.

T. R. INDORSES BULL MOOSERS' CAMPAIGN PLAN

The Massachusetts Progressives, at a banquet in Mechanics' Hall tomorrow night, will start an eight-day canvas for a $25,000 campaign fund. Messages from Colonel Roosevelt and Governor Hiram Johnson of California indorsing the scheme have been received by Matthew Hale, chairman of the Progressive State Committee.

Colonel Roosevelt in his letter says: "At this moment many of our local leaders, who are poor men, are themselves paying the entire expenses of their several campaign districts.

"Our principle is that the party organization belongs to the rank and file of the party, and nothing will tend to make this in the fullest sense a reality so much as the actual contribution by the rank and file."

Boston Opera Girls Must Pay Or Stand Up to Escape Jail

By FREDERICK JOHNS.

PARIS, June 1.—In Paris you must pay two cents for the privilege of sitting down in a chair in the park. The ticket given you entitles you to the privilege of a chair for the day. Imagine the feelings of a lot of frenzied American citizenesses being asked to pay for the privilege of sitting down in a public park. Nothing doing!

They sat until the old woman who sells the tickets comes along and demands, then they get up and run. The old woman cannot run after them and they beat the game. That is, they think so.

A few days ago, however, a police inspector called upon Henry Russell and told him that he must notify his chorus that if they sit down in the park they must pay. If not, some night when an opera is to be given he will discover that his entire chorus has been taken to the lockup.

"They would do it, too, in a minute," said Russell, as he warned his chorus to pay up or stand up.

Hub Lawyer Found with Bullet in Head Thought a Suicide

Frederic Sherwood Elliot, forty-one, a Boston lawyer, whose home was at No. 15 Lawson road, Winchester, was found in the basement of his home with a bullet wound in his temple. Miss Adelaide Pefrol, in whose home Mr. Elliot had lived for some time and who found his body, said he had acted despondently and peculiarly for weeks.

Medical Examiner William H. Kelleher would not say that the death was suicidal and indicated that he would make an examination before deciding.

Becker Cheered by Prison Band

OSSINING, N. Y., June 1.—The music of the prison band on parade brought cheer to Charles Becker in the death house in Sing Sing yesterday. Though the selections were suitable to a memorial service the band played in a spirit enlivening to all the convicts. The band marched outside the prison walls, met Morrell Post, G. A. R., and escorted that organization into the prison.

Mrs. A. J. George Calls the Suffrage Resolve a Slander

WASHINGTON, June 1.—Mrs. A. J. George of Brookline, Mass., has issued a vigorous reply to a recent resolution of the New England Women's Suffrage Association, denouncing as a "gross slander" the charges of the antis that feminism is synonymous with loose morals.

"The resolution is the most extraordinary ever adopted by a public assemblage," says Mrs. George. "These suffragists should not condemn their opponents, but they should hasten to withdraw from the suffrage platform those who are preaching feminism."

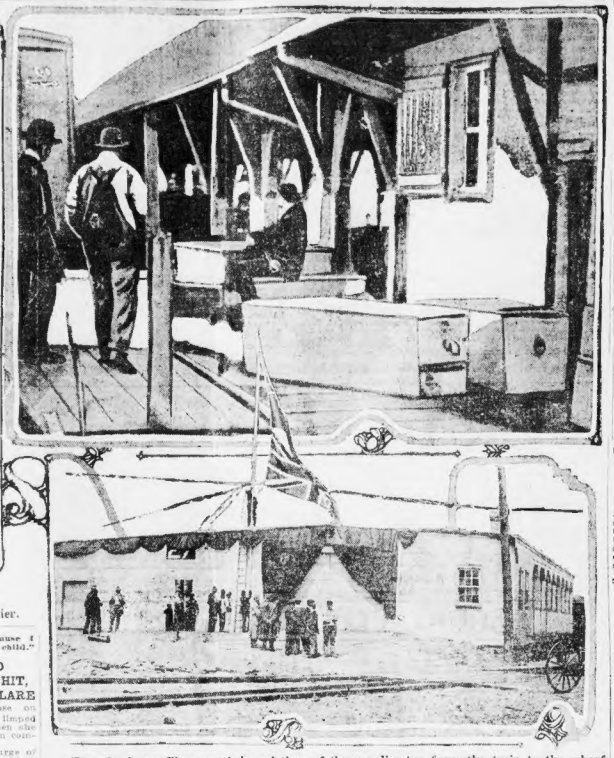
TRANSFERRING THE BODIES OF EMPRESS' DEAD

PHOTOS © BY INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

Mrs. Anderson, wife of the commander of Storstad, photographed on bridge of the collier.



Transferring coffins containing victims of the sea disaster from the train to the wharf at Rimouski for shipment to Quebec, and the temporary crepe-draped morgue at Quebec, where 300 bodies are awaiting identification.

PATHETIC SCENES AS RELATIVES SEARCH MORGUE AT QUEBEC

QUEBEC, June 1.—The morgue at the dock where the Lady Grey landed her dead from Rimouski was reopened today and the pathetic task of relatives and friends seeking to identify the victims went slowly on.

The red coats and white helmets of the men from the cruiser Essex gave the only touch of color to the scene.

One man found his young child, a pretty boy of three years, and pressed his face against the white cloth that covered the little corpse. The tiny body was inside. There was a black and blue mark across his forehead and his legs and hands were a deep purple from the cold.

Crying and moaning, the father pulled the sheet from the cold and silent figure and pressed his head over the stilled heart. Then he caught one of the little hands and squeezed it tightly in his own, while the tears ran down his cheeks. The crowd which stood by, most of whom were on a similar errand, stood with uncovered bowed heads.

BABIES' ROW IN MORGUE.

Babies' row in the morgue contained twenty-four little coffins, each holding the lifeless corpse of an infant. The children had stood no chance to save themselves when the Empress foundered unless picked up immediately by strong swimmers or lifeboats.

There were nearly as many women as men in the first consignment of dead and scarcely a dozen of them were fully dressed. Practically all were in their night garments, having been caught in their sleep by the suddenness of the disaster.

Some of the bodies of the dead were naked. They were encased in a motley array of coffins and hurried to the morgue. Some bore little crucifixes, symbols of the Roman Catholic Church. There were caskets of mahogany beside unpainted pine boxes, which had been hurriedly thrown together to answer the pressing needs of the moment. One woman, still encased in the night gown in which she had gone to her death, her hair tossed and tangled about her head, lay in a casket lined with pink, colored plush. This was the only coffin of the lot that contained a glass face, through which the features of its silent inmate was visible.

CHEESECLOTH LINED.

Nearly all of the coffins containing the bodies of the children were home made and naked. They were encased in cheesecloth.

Some of the persons who came here to identify their dead and to claim the bodies criticised the authorities in their impatience. In the grief-crazed state of mind they thought the work of identification ought to have been hurried along faster. Close association with pathos and death had removed much of its horror from the workmen who labored away amidst the lamentations of the morgue unscrewing the tops of coffins which were brought here from Rimouski, or boarding up the corpses which had been identified.

Plans are being perfected for a big military funeral for the unidentified dead in this city.

"CONSCIENCE CLEAR," SAYS CAPT. KENDALL

MONTREAL, June 1.—Captain Kendall of the Empress of Ireland, who has arrived here from Quebec to await the official inquiry into the collision of his ship and the Storstad, is a wreck of his former self. He has slept but a few hours since the crash.

Clad in pajamas and propped up by a berth of the special car that brought him here, Captain Kendall evidently needed the two physicians who accompanied him. His face was drawn, his eyes staring. His hands were continually in motion, clasping and unclasping the fingers.

"Captain, are you ready to say that the blame is Captain Anderson's?" asked the ARGONAUT correspondent.

"No, God knows I will never bear such a horrible thing on any man's shoulders," he answered. "Thank Heaven, though, I am blameless in my own conscience."

"Was fog the cause of the accident?"

"Yes, it was. Absolutely. It was so foggy that we did not know our peril until it was too late to avoid it. I could not see the Storstad, although I heard her siren, until she loomed out of the mist almost under our bow."

"How far could you see then?"

"I should say it was not more than three or three times the length of my ship. Anyway, it was not far more. I had no lifebelt because I had given that to a man and a child."

STORSTAD FULL SPEED ASTERN WHEN SHE HIT, HER CREW DECLARE

MONTREAL, June 1.—Those on board the Storstad, which has limped into this port, agree that when she struck the Empress she was in command of the first officer.

The engine room was in charge of the third engineer when the accident happened. He declined to give his name, but his story threw considerable light on the catastrophe.

"How was the Storstad going when she struck the Empress?" he was asked.

"She was going full speed astern," he replied.

"When was the signal to go full speed astern given" was the next question.

"I could not exactly say," he replied. "Perhaps it was a minute or so.

"Was it more than a minute?"

"Yes," was the reply. "I should say it was rather more than a minute."

"And you are quite certain that the Storstad was going astern before she actually struck the Empress?"

"I am certain," he replied.

"FULL SPEED ASTERN."

The first engineer declined to say anything. The second engineer was not on duty at the time of the accident, but he claimed that the Storstad had not come up the river before the accident at a speed greater than ten knots.

"We had encountered thick fog," he said.

"Did you feel the shock?" he was asked.

"Yes, I felt it," he replied. "I noticed it, but it was not very severe. I noticed first that the engines had been reversed and were going full speed astern; then about a minute later came the shock."

You are certain the engines had been reversed," he was asked.

"Yes," he replied, "they were going astern."

"It has been argued," he was told, "that if the Storstad had kept on ahead instead of rising her engines astern, she would have helped to protect the Empress from the rush of water and probably more lives would have been saved."

"I do not think so," was the reply. "We struck the Empress a glancing blow. Almost immediately we struck the boats had drifted apart again. I do not see how matters would have been improved by driving ahead. We were already going full speed astern, you remember, when we struck."

SAVED MANY IN WATER.

"I was in my bunk when the accident occurred," said A. Brisal, the cook.

"What awakened me was a tremendous clanging of bells in the engine room. I was rather surprised and put it down that we were picking up the pilot. Then I noticed that we were going full speed astern. A moment or so later I felt the shock."

"How then a minute before the ship struck, that the engines were running astern?"

"Yes, it would be a minute. Although the shock did not seem severe I felt rather nervous, rushed up on deck and saw the Empress. I ran aft and got into the second mate's boat. In it already were four firemen. We immediately lowered away and I noticed that the Storstad lowered three or four more boats.

"We did all we could to pick up passengers. First, we turned our attention to those who still showed signs of life. We rowed round picking up all we could. I should think we picked up sixty altogether on our first trip. We picked up so many that the boat was weighed down almost level with the water.

"We kept on going back till we picked up any we could find were alive. We did everything we could. Our first boatload were mostly men belonging to the crew. They seemed to be better able to stand the exposure, and I suppose that is why more of them were saved. The first we had were in pretty good shape, but they could not help us much. The others were practically helpless.

"I do not know how it can be charged that we did not help on the rescue work. I was in one of the boats myself and saw what was done. We did all we could."

Before the accident happened, did you hear the siren of the Empress?"

"No," he said, "I did not. I do not say that the Empress was not giving any warning, I simply did not hear anything."

Someone Waiting to Hear From You?

"O IT'S you, Harry? This is a fine surprise! Little Billie was just wishing he could say good-night to Papa. It is not going to be so hard to have you away if you will only talk with me each night. It won't be so lonely, now, and you won't seem to be so far away, either . . . . You are going to New York, also?—well, you will, call me, won't you? Now the kiddies want to talk to you."

New England Telephone and Telegraph Company

No 27 Attention, Mayor Curley

If you had made as good contract for the people of Boston with the Electric Light Company as the city of Fresno, Cal., made with its Electric Light Company, Boston would save about six hundred and ninety-eight thousand dollars during the period of the contract which you wish to foist upon Boston. This great sum, saved by this city, would give more than NINE HUNDRED AND THIRTY WORKMEN A FULL YEAR'S EMPLOYMENT.

Would you have been elected Mayor, Mr. Curley, if you had told the people of Boston that you considered the 12 per cent. dividends of the Edison Electric Light Company more sacred than the bread and butter of the clerks, the laborers, the police, the firemen, the nurses, the matrons employed by the city, whom you have reduced, or discharged, or more sacred than the pleasure and health which the citizens obtain from their parks and public buildings which your FALSE economy tends to cripple?

Tells How Suffrage Works in Australia

Mrs. Lister-Watson of Melbourne, Australia, and Albert Hinchcliffe, a member of the Queensland Parliament, today addressed members of the Boston Equal Suffrage Association at No. 585 Boylston street, describing the working of woman suffrage in Australia.

GOOD STARTS WAR ON VICE IN CAMBRIDGE

Mayor Timothy W. Good and Commissioner of Public Safety Henry J. Cunningham today started its to clean up Cambridge. The Mayor says the city is "wide open" and is determined to put an end to gambling and the alleged sale of liquor, and Cunningham declares persons who ought to help in the work are embarrassing the administration by spreading false reports. In an interview today Mayor Good said:

"As the result of complaints from clergymen, anonymous letters, and evidence from people who have lost money to professional gamblers, and in addition the fruits of my personal investigation, I have come to the conclusion that it is high time to act. I do not propose that gamblers from Boston, Revere and other places shall carry on their business in Cambridge."

Regarding the druggists, the Mayor stated that he was not satisfied that the law regarding the sale of intoxicating liquors is being complied with, and that he intends that the druggists assure to the law.

As to the boxing exhibitions which have been going on in Cambridge for the past several months against the city of Quincy and others, the Mayor said that he had been unable to detect any real wrongdoing, but that he had been informed that the promoters were about to wind up these affairs in Cambridge.

Manager of Ice Company Injured

Arthur J. Barlour, manager of the Dorchester Ice Company, broke his leg early today when the bolt of a wagon in which he was driving along Dorchester avenue broke, and he jumped free of the wreck. The horse ran, with the half-wagon clattering behind it, but was stopped by a patrolman.

SETTLING A RED HOT QUESTION; TO WIT, VIZ: WHAT IS A SAUSAGE?

What is a sausage?

* * *

A question, it will perhaps be admitted, which has been asked repeatedly and never satisfactorily answered—since the Germans discovered beer, and sausage became automatically, as it were, one of the necessaries of life.

* * *

The stag boarder who, asked what he had for supper, said that he had partaken of "a little of everything," probably meant that that was the night for hash. But he might have been referring to sausage, as sausage was made and sold in these parts before Americans began to worry about pure food and Pure Food-laws.

* * *

Today, as is of course well known to even the youngest child, among us, a sausage is a sausage.

* * *

To clinch the matter, however, to remove all doubt, to establish the facts once and for all, the Massachusetts House of Representatives has now decreed in its wisdom that:

* * *

Sausage, or sausage meat, is defined to be a comminuted meat from neat cattle, swine or veal, or a mixture of such meats either fresh, salted, pickled or smoked, with added salt and spices, and cereal and the like, and with or without the addition of edible animal fats, blood and sugar, or subsequent smoking.

* * *

Having thus answered the more important question: "What is a sausage?" the House of Representatives has in regular order tackled the next proposition, to wit, viz:

* * *

When is a sausage NOT a sausage?

* * *

And we are duly informed, in a bill which has already passed the House, but which may yet fall before the meat-chopper of the honorable Senate, that "for the purpose of this Act, sausage shall be deemed to be ADULTERATED."

* * *

If it contains any cereal or vegetable flour, or any product thereof, in excess of 2 per cent.

If it contains any coloring matter, or any substance injurious or deleterious to health.

If it contains water in excess of an amount sufficient to make the product palatable and to facilitate mixing and placing in casings.

If it contains the stomach, or intestines or cuticle or any part thereof, except heart, tripe and liver, except as a casing.

If it contains any diseased, contaminated, filthy or decomposed substance; or if it is manufactured, in whole or in part or contains a substance produced, stored, transported or kept in a way or manner that would render the article diseased contaminated or unwholesome; or if it is the product of a diseased animal or the product of any animal which has died otherwise than by slaughter.

* * *

The Sausage Bill declares that "it shall be unlawful to sell or offer or expose for sale sausage manufactured contrary to the provisions of this act or adulterated within the meaning of this act; and the bill provides further that "whoever violates the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars for each offence."

* * *

It remains only to give credit where credit is due, and to report faithfully that the Sausage Bill was drawn by Representative Lewis R. Sullivan of Ward 20, Dorchester.

* * *

And to warn all lovers of true and honorable sausage that when this bill comes before the Senate it is likely to be denatured by having the cute little word "wilfully" scattered all through it as pepper, if condiment. Which, so far as good sausage is concerned, would leave us where we are.

* * *

Eminent and somewhat sour Republican, bumped in early today in the sun parlor at the southeast corner of Beacon and Tremont streets, gives it as his opinion that, if Charles Summer Bird is permitted to run again, the third flight of bird will indicate that the Audubon Society is guilty of gross neglect of duty and malfeasance in office.

* * *

Occurs that the eminent standpatter may have overlooked something. Why not take the matter up with the B. P. C. A.?

* * *

Report in the Sunday AMERICAN that the Governor, calling attention to the desire of the Washington Administration, with reference to the separation of the Boston & Maine from the New Haven, WOULD NOT SUBMIT A BILL OF HIS OWN DRAFTING, appeared to be quite startling topic of conversation among such legislators as reported early today at the State House.

* * *

Opinion appears to be unanimous that the Governor in this matter has acted wisely. He tells the Legislature, in his message, exactly what the situation is and describes what is desired.

* * *

Expected that, true to the Republican declaration of war of one week ago yesterday, certain Republican leaders in House and Senate will within twenty-four hours inform the people of Massachusetts that the Democratic Governor has struck a blow at representative government, the Constitution of Massachusetts, the Magna Charta, and the Joe Hooker statue.

* * *

Ba not alarmed!

* * *

Republicans want an issue for the Fall campaign. They were prepared to make it out of this railroad message from the Governor, whatever it message might have said.

Much will be said about retaining the control over the New Haven's ownership of Boston & Maine provided in the Boston Holding Company.

* * *

And some Democrat will be likely to point out that the Holding Company was the device urged by a Republican Governor to enable the New Haven to retain control of Boston & Maine stock purchased in violation of the laws of Massachusetts.

* * *

The present problem is to dispose of that Boston & Maine stock; to find a purchaser for it other than the New Haven Railroad. The Federal Government and the New Haven people have agreed upon a Board of Trustees, five in number, who are to find such purchaser within two and one-half years.

* * *

Expectation was, early today—as was also reported in the Sunday AMERICAN—that the Governor would suggest certain safeguards, one of which was likely to be that the Governor of Massachusetts must be consulted before the Board of Trustees is permitted to dispose of Boston & Maine.

* * *

Appears that, in view of such safeguards, Republican leaders may be hard pressed for an "anti-Walsh" issue.

However, a body of practical politicians so desperately in need of an issue as the Republicans appear to be at this time will be likely to make one, by hook or by crook.

SURVIVORS ACCUSE EMPRESS OF IRELAND CREW OF COWARDICE

stand will confront each other at this inquiry, and will be sharply questioned on the points where the stories of the disaster differ.

Each commander has blamed the other for the tragedy, and the contradictions are so pointed that both captains will be compelled to repeat their versions and present evidence to back them up.

OVERCOME BY MEMORY.

Jan Cozyn had to tell his story through an interpreter. From time to time he stopped, overcome by the memory of the horrors through which he had passed.

"I heard a noise of people running about and shouting," he said. "And I ran out of my stateroom. Men and women were running everywhere, not knowing what to do. I had a hard job trying to get on deck. It was like climbing up a steep bank. I did not see many people up there because they slipped off. It was hard to climb for the ship filled with water on one side and rolled over in a few minutes. Suddenly there was a noise like water boiling and I went far down under the surface.

"I fought to get to the surface and when I did so I began to swim. Men and women were all about. I could hear cries before that, but now all was silent. I saw a boat. I had to fight to get on board of it.

"I put my hands on the gunwhale and started to climb in, but a sailor kicked me on the right shoulder and I went down again.

"I could climb in again. Some sailors were in uniforms and some men in their night clothes. They had no locks for the oars.

"The sailors did not think of the passengers on the ship or of those in the water. They thought only of their own safety. They did not do their duty. With women and men near, they did not try to get them into the lifeboats.

ROOM FOR MORE.

"There was room in two boats for more survivors. There was plenty of spare room in the boat into which I tried to climb.

"The sailors were the first to climb into the life boats and the first to be saved. I saw more sailors than passengers in the boats.

"When the sailor kicked me off of the rim of that life boat I knew I must save myself alone. I was afraid he would kill me if I made a second effort to get into the boat. I was a steerage passenger and I suppose he did not care.

The weather was not foggy, so the officials of the line said. It was pretty clear. The ship was a mile away and I could see them putting off small boats, but the work seemed mighty slow. The Eureka did the best work. They got me and the captain and his crew were very kind."

SAILORS TRIED ONLY TO SAVE THEMSELVES

QUEBEC, June 1.—Abraham Keller of Toronto said:

"I was in my berth when a young fellow I have not seen since woke me and said there was something wrong with the ship. I got up and almost as soon as I did so the water rushed in as the Storstad's bow had cut into the side of the ship on which my stateroom was located. The water knocked me down, but I managed to force open the door. Then I fell again. The water was rising.

"I pulled myself up the stairs. The screams and noise was terrible. It pierced my head. Everything happened quickly. Men and women ran past me.

"I saw sailors working frenziedly to swing the lifeboats from the davits. Then they got into them and rowed away. Thus many sailors were saved in boats in which there were no passengers. Why? Because no one paid any attention to the passengers. The sailors wanted to save themselves.

"I tried to launch a boat, but could not get it loose. Then other men helped me and women, too, but it was no use. It was then that I looked down and saw members of the crew pushing off. I felt the ship sinking fast beneath me and jumped away from the deck. When I arose to the surface I began swimming away from the sinking liner as hard as I could. I looked up and saw one of the funnels towering above me, for by this time the vessel had rolled over on her side. When I had swam clear of that I felt safer.

BLOWN INTO WATER.

"Then there was a report like a cannon and flames shot up. I saw wreckage and people blown into the water.

"I kept swimming, but was rapidly getting chilled, for the water was cold as ice. I saw a life boat and struck out for it. I was so tired that I could barely lift my arms to the gunwales. I said to the sailors: 'Boys, help me. Save me, boys.' They neither looked at me nor answered, but kept on rowing away. After efforts that took all my strength I managed to get one leg over the boat's side. I kept calling to them to help me for God's sake, but not a sailor moved in my direction. After it seemed hours I finally managed to crawl into the boat and lay exhausted and helpless in the bottom.

"A Polish fellow was in the water on the other side of the boat, begging for help and trying to crawl over the boat's side. I wanted to help him, but an old sailor in the stern of the boat swore he would throw me out or kill me if I didn't keep still. The boat would have held twenty, but they wouldn't help the Pole, who kept crying out for help as we moved away.

CLUNG TO THE BOAT.

"I don't know how he held on so long, but that Pole was a man of strength and courage. He clung to our boat until the Eureka came to our assistance and saved us all. As a small boat from the Eureka came to our aid the same sailor who had threatened to kill me pointed to the Pole and shouted: 'Be sure to save that fellow.' The Pole lost a wife and two children in the disaster.

"While the Eureka's small boat was ranging alongside, a half-dressed man swam swiftly up and vainly tried to climb aboard. It was true that was no more than a bronze whisper that begged to be taken aboard. Not a sailor moved to save him, but I gave him a hand and managed to get him in. He lay shivering and dripping in his night clothes in the bottom of the boat and struggled for breath while he cursed his fellowmates for their willingness to let him drown. The man was a sailor.

"The Eureka and her crew saved many people and deserve high praise, even more than the rescued."

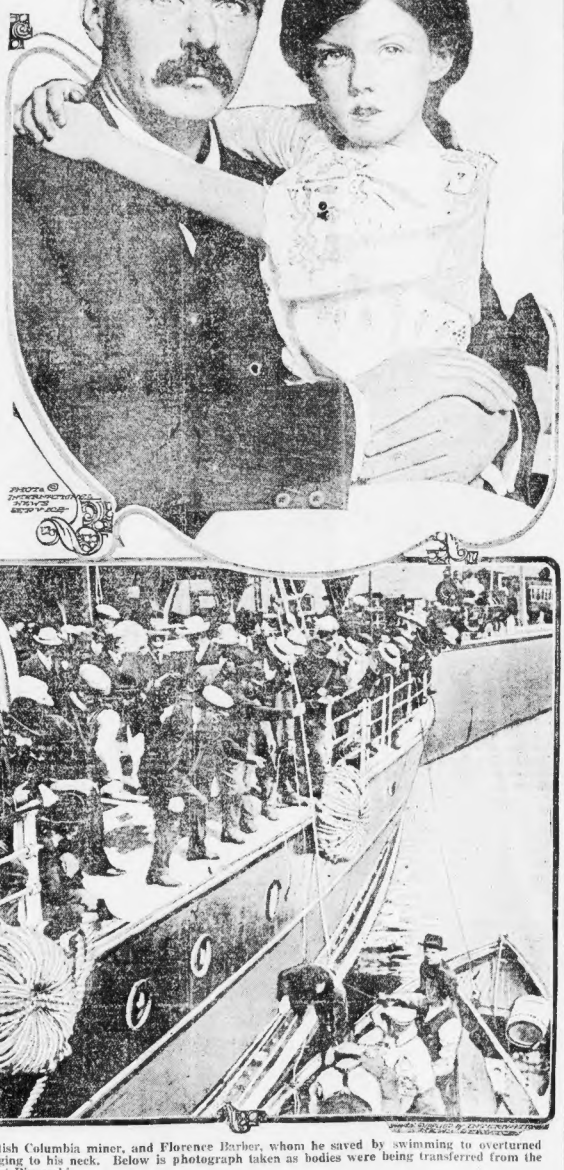
Magnus Larsen, a Norwegian who lost his wife, said:

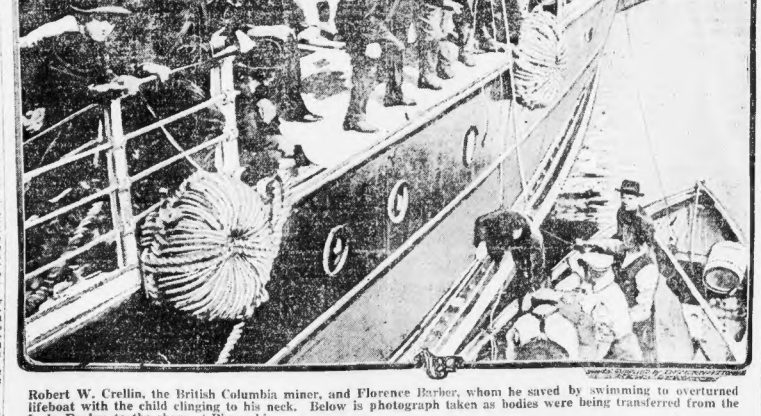
"There was an explosion which knocked my wife, myself and many other persons into the water. God knows I did my best to save my wife from drowning, but she became panic stricken, and when I tried to support her she struggled in my grasp and nearly took both of us to the bottom.

"My memory of those dreadful minutes in the water is blurred. There was wreckage all about so I clung to a timber until the Eureka came up. I saw a woman floating by me. She was nearly unconscious and called out: 'Save me, save me!' I clutched her hair and pulled her half across the timber.

"When we were landed at Rimouski the Canadian Pacific Company did little or nothing for us. I had to go from cottage to cottage to get something to eat. The first day in Rimouski (Friday) I had only two crackers all day."

Empress Wreck Hero





Robert W. Crellin, the British Columbia miner, and Florence Barber, whom he saved by swimming to overturned lifeboat with the child clinging to his neck. Below is photograph taken as bodies were being transferred from the Lady Evelyn to the shore at Rimonski.

PATROLS HUNT BODIES ON LAND AND AT SEA

FATHER POINT, Que., June 1.—Shallow pilot boats and automobiles maintained a double patrol by sea and land today in a search for bodies of those who perished in the disaster that went the Empress of Ireland to the bottom of the St. Lawrence River. Constables have been specially sworn in along the coast and they are kept in constant touch by telephone or telegraph.

Though the great majority of those who perished are believed to lie within the sunken liner 120 feet below the surface of the water, scores of bodies probably will be picked up on the shore within the next two weeks. It is feared that many will be carried out in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and never recovered.

Two lifeboats from the Empress have been picked up by the steamer Grampian twenty-five miles from the spot where the Storstad rammed the Empress. Both were overturned. No bodies were found in the vicinity and it is thought that if the boats had occupants their bodies were swept still farther away by the river.

A gas buoy has been placed to mark the wreck. Soundings have established that the Empress lies twenty fathoms deep, three and a half miles from shore. Bubbles are still ascending over the whole length of the ship, showing that the air within her has not been exhausted. The bottom on which she lies is of soft clay.

Manager Whiteside of the Marconi Company, Manager Williams of the Great Northwestern Telegraph Company, Captain Belanger of the Europa and the three wireless operators who heard the "S. O. S." sent from the Empress of Ireland have been summoned to attend the official investigation at Montreal. Captain Belanger, like Captain Kendall of the Empress, figured in the arrest of Dr. H. H. Crippen, the London murderer. It was Captain Belanger's uniform that Detective Dew wore to impersonate a pilot when he arrested Crippen.

STORSTAD AGENTS SAY SHIP DIDN'T BACK OUT

MONTREAL, Que., June 1.—Captain Ove Lange and Attorney John W. Griffin, representing the owners of the Storstad, have issued a statement which is a complete contradiction of the testimony given by Captain Kendall of the Empress of Ireland before a board of inquiry at Rimouski. They say, in part:

"The vessels sighted one another when far apart. The Empress of Ireland was seen off the port bow of our vessel. Her green, or starboard, light was visible to those on the Storstad. Under these circumstances the rules of navigation gave to the Storstad the right of way.

"The heading of the Empress was then changed in such a manner as to put the vessels in a position to pass safely. Shortly afterwards a fog enveloped first the Empress and then the Storstad. Our signals were exchanged. The Storstad engines were at once slowed and then stopped.

"Her heading remained unaltered. The Empress was then seen through the fog close at hand on the port bow of the Storstad. She was showing her green light and was making considerable headway.

"The the engines of the Storstad were at once reversed at full speed and her headway was nearly checked when the two vessels came together.

"If has been said that the Storstad should not have backed out of the hole made by the collision. She did not do so.

"SWUNG SHIP AROUND."

"As the vessels came together her engines were ordered ahead for the purpose of holding her bow against the side of the Empress and thus preventing the entrance of water into either vessel.

"The headway of the other vessel, however, swung our ship around in such a way as to twist her bow out of the hole and bend it clear over to the port side.

"The Empress of Ireland at once disappeared in the fog. The Storstad sounded her whistle repeatedly in an effort to locate her, but could obtain no indication of her whereabouts until cries were heard.

"It is not true that Captain Andersen backed away at full speed, and, instead of being a mile away, his boat was not more than five lengths away. His maneuvred as close to the Empress as was safe in view of the danger of injuring persons already in the water.

"All boats were lowered at once and sent to save the passengers and crew of the other vessel, although the Storstad herself was in serious danger of sinking. When two of the boats from the sinking vessel reached the Storstad the latter's men manned them also and continues the rescue work.

"In all, about 250 persons were taken on board and everything that the ship's stores contained was utilized for their comfort, and every possible assistance given."

STAND BY CAPTAIN.

"Statements that have appeared in the press indicating that there was the slightest delay in giving prompt and efficient aid to the injured or to the captain who did not hesitate to send out every boat he had in spite of the desperate condition of his own ship.

"Captain Anderson did hear Captain Kendall shout not to go astern but keep full speed ahead so as to keep the rent in the vessel's side closed.

"Although Captain Kendall has testified that he heard no answer from the Storstad's commander, he clearly must be mistaken. 'I am going ahead.'

"We further take exceptions to Captain Kendall's statement that his ship was absolutely stationary. Had it not been making considerable headway the Storstad would have been able to keep her prow in the other steamer's side and there would have been no sinking of either vessel."

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR VICTIMS TO BE HELD IN ST. PAUL'S

LONDON, June 1.—A memorial service for the victims in the Empress of Ireland disaster will be held in St. Paul's this week. It will be national in character and will be attended by a representative of the royal family.

Crowds continue to besiege the offices of the Canadian Pacific line in scouring for information about relatives or friends who were on board the Empress of Ireland.

The newspapers today contained graphic accounts of the disaster as narrated by survivors and cabled here from Montreal and Quebec. In some of these Captain Thomas Anderson of the Storstad, which rammed the Empress of Ireland, is accused of careless seamanship.

COLLIER STORSTAD IS LIBELED FOR $2,000,000 BY C. P. R.

MONTREAL, June 1.—The collier Storstad, which rammed the liner Empress of Ireland, reached here not little injured. Her stem was bent back for over a dozen feet high above the water line and she stood up straight. She has about 11,000 tons of coal on board.

Only a few officials were allowed to board her.

As soon as the vessel tied up, a writ, issued by the Canadian Pacific railway claiming $2,000,000 in the Quebec Admiralty Court, was served on Captain Anderson and the Storstad was placed under detention.

SCENES AT HOSPITAL.

About the East Boston Relief Hospital, whither most of the victims were taken, affecting scenes were enacted. A crowd swiftly gathered. Half an hour after the explosion, a woman with a baby in her arms, pushed her way through this crowd and up to the hospital entrance.

"I want to get in. I want to get in," she cried. "Is my husband hurt?"

"What is his name, ma'am?" asked the orderly.

"Thomas Butler," cried the woman, her face distorted with fear.

The orderly went to the ward. He soon told that Thomas Butler had just died of his injuries. As he returned reluctantly to send the woman away, he saw she had been joined by a man—Butler's brother. The orderly told the brother of Butler's death, and Mrs. Butler was taken home.

Arthur H. Gifford, a G. A. R. veteran, and an aged woman came next, to ask for former Gifford. Elmer Gifford was dangerously injured, but they were taken in and allowed to see him. The old man went away comforted.

STORY OF ACCIDENT.

D. J. McGillicuddy, who with a gang of men was repairing the roof of the main building, told one story of the accident. He said:

"We were at work as usual, when without warning a tremendous cloud of debris rose in the air at one end of the plant. The next instant the shock of the explosion struck us and we heard the terrific blast of it. We saw the debris before the sound reached us.

"Arthur Peterson, one of my men, was hit by a piece of debris and slightly hurt. The rest of us were lucky enough to escape, though bricks and bits of steel fell all about us on the roof.

"The whole building shook beneath us. The shock was indescribable. The noise must have been heard for miles."

DOCTOR COMES QUICK.

Dr. J. J. Coady, who lives at No. 25 Central square, heard the explosion and grabbed his surgical kit, hurrying to the scene. He gave first aid to the injured then until the ambulance arrived. He said:

"I came on the run. The screen house looked as though a huge knife had been run down between it and the main building, and had simply scraped it off the earth. There was nothing left that could be called a building. It was just scrap-steel and broken brick.

"Bricks fell everywhere. I saw some in the street a hundred yards from the plant. One brick struck in the mouth a man crossing Chelsea bridge. He had a bad cut. I washed it out and sent him home. I don't know who he was. The bridge is a hundred yards from the plant."

ENGINES DAMAGED.

The explosion put out of commission temporarily a large part of the sewage plant. There are four engines in the plant—one large one and and three small. The large one was not injured. The three smaller ones, which pump more than half of the sewage, have a capacity of 60 million gallons per hour. It is believed, however, there will be no permanent blocking of the lines.

The screening plant and screen house cost $25,000 to erect. The remainder of the damage was to the main plant and to surrounding houses whose windows were broken by missiles or by the shock.

CAUSED BY SEWER GAS.

The explosion was caused by sewer gas. This gas collected below the screen. It is said it had been noticed for the past few weeks and that three men had also been overcome by effects of its effect upon them.

The six men at work in the screen house today had smelled the gas, but thought nothing of it till, at about 10:30 and without warning, the explosion came. The immediate cause is not known.

"STORSTAD HELD SPEED, SOUNDED NO WHISTLE"

QUEBEC, June 1.—Alec C. Radley, chief boatswain's mate, who was on the forward deck of the Empress of Ireland at the time of the accident, today declared there could have been no misunderstandings of signals; that the Empress had her powerful siren going all the time, and so did the Storstad. He insisted the Storstad's warning had been heard by the Empress when the collier was perhaps two miles away and that the Empress came to a full stop.

Radley also asserted that before the collier came out of the fog bank 100 yards away she must have heard the Empress repeat three blasts, indicating that she was under full speed astern.

"But the Storstad did not slacken up a bit," said the boatswain's mate. "She came into us at almost her full speed; I should say six or seven knots at least

"She sounded no signals except her fog siren, which she kept blowing till the time she was coming into us. Captain Kendall shouted to them through his megaphone to back astip, and the last time he was almost crying."

TRAPPED BY STAIRWAY.

Mr. Radley explained why there were so few women saved by saying: "The stairways were all upside down."

"No one could get up them, not even the strongest men," said Radley. "They were all caught like in a prison. There was no way for them to get out. It was fearful.

"It was the worst thing I have known in all my experience at sea. I was on the forward deck, looking over the rail. I was in charge of the watch of about a dozen men. The weather was fine, clear and nice.

"When we were approaching Father Point to land our pilot, I was surprised to hear the foghorn at the Point blowing. It was going all the time. Then we saw ahead a fog bank low on the water.

"Captain Kendall started the foghorn going continually, one long blast every minute or less. Pretty soon I heard the warning of the Storstad. So did Captain Kendall. I can tell by the sound where a ship is located, almost within a few feet. When we got the first warning of the Storstad she must have been anywhere from a mile to two miles away, I should judge.

"SOUNDED ONLY HORN."

"Almost immediately Captain Kendall brought the ship to a stop. She was absolutely stopped. The Storstad kept coming and we could tell by the increasing strength of the horn that she was getting closer. She must have heard our warning first, because it was much more powerful.

"Then Captain Kendall sounded three blasts of his whistle, which means for full speed astern, and can be heard by the approaching vessel almost as plainly as aboard. He repeated the three blasts and about the second or third time I saw the masthead lights of the Storstad come up over the fog mark. She must have been about 100 yards away.

"She blew no signals but her fog horn. She sounded no three blasts for speed astern. She came ahead at her full speed, apparently about six or seven knots, I should say. Captain Kendall shouted through his megaphone 'Go astern.'

"The Storstad kept blowing her siren, but did not slacken up a bit. Again Captain Kendall shouted through his megaphones 'Go astern. Why don't you go astern?'

"I think the last time he yelled he was almost crying. It was hopeless, although the Empress then was pounding at full speed astern with her engines. The Storstad seemed to fall out of the fog and tear into our starboard.

BOAT KILLED SAILOR.

"When we saw she was going to strike, I ran forward and shouted a warning to the men of the watch, who were asleep, about forty or fifty of them. Then I ran back to the boat deck to break out the lifeboats according to my orders.

"When I got up to No. 1 Captain Kendall was working with all his might and main to get them broken out, to clear the ship lines so the boats could be swung out.

"The list, which came almost as soon as the ship was struck, prevented free movement of the lifeboats. The first one we broke away tumbled and killed a sailor. All the time Captain Kendall used the men to get the boats out quickly. My duty sent me aft, along the line of boats, clearing the lines.

"When I reached the last boat on the boat deck I ran down to the saloon deck to clear the boats there. There were seven or eight of the men passengers out on the deck to see what was the matter. They were in their pajamas. I told them to hurry in and get their women folks out. The ship was heeling over fast all the time, mind you, all this was happening in five or six minutes.

"When I broke the last boat on that deck the ship was so far over that the lifeboat swung back and forth and nearly threw me overboard. It was No. 15 on the starboard deck. But we got it to the water. There it was fouled. I cleared the stern fall, but the forward was caught.

GIRL'S BODY FLOATS THROUGH HOLE IN SHIP

By PAUL HARRIS DRAKE.

MONTREAL, June 1.—The funeral of Waneta Crathern, one of the best known and best-loved young women in Montreal, and a victim of the Empress wreck, was held here today. Miss Crathern's stateroom was crushed in by the collision, she was killed by a blow from a piece of wreckage and the water that rushed into her stateroom through the great rent in the wall caught her limp body and bore it out and to the surface. This, at least, is the thory of her brother, who identified the body.

Miss Crathern's body was the first of all the survivors to be identified. She was thirty-five years old, the adopted daughter of George Caverhill, who is one of Montreal's leading business men. She was a frequent visitor in Boston, and is well known there. Her work was kindergartening, and she was so successful she had been offered the post of supervisor of kindergartens for the Associated Settlement Workers of Montreal. It was in preparation for this position that she planned a trip abroad this Summer.

The story of the recovery of the body reads like a miracle. It is told by Fred Crathern, the girl's brother. He lives at No. 135 Grey avenue, Montreal, and went by special train to Rimouski to seek his sister or her body. Late Friday night he commenced his search among the 200 bodies laid in rows under fishing sheds on the wharf.

After searching through one shed containing one hundred and fifty bodies, Mr. Crathern found his sister, the first person in the row in the second shed. This is Mr. Crathern's story of her death:

"She was dressed only in her night gown and a light knit upper sleeping garment. One stocking was drawn over the knee and the other was in a rolled bundle around the ankle, indicating that Miss Crathern had met death while drawing on her stockings in her state room. Two deep gashes on the back of her head were the only bruises.

"She had an outside stateroom in the first cabin on the port side, directly in the path of the grim Storstad. From survivors it was learned that, when the Storsind drew away, several bodies from the shattered staterooms floated out through the opening and rose to the surface.

"Miss Crathern's must have been among them, as the medical examiner said there was no water in her lungs. She undoubtedly was killed while drawing on her stockings and probably never knew what had occurred. On her face she wore almost a smile, as if she was dreaming when she met her death.

"At Rimouski the Canadian Pacific authorities handed me a letter from my sister addressed to her father, Mr. Caverhill, which had been brought ashore by the pilot when he left the Empress of Ireland the night before. It was like a message from another world.

"I took charge of the body and brought it back to Montreal on the special train Friday night. Miss Crathern's was the first body to be identified, as well as the first to arrive at the place which had been her home until Thursday, two days before.

Courtesy Next to Efficiency in Modern Business

The time has gone when because a man was capable he could afford to be discourteous. Today people recognize the common sense in combining the two virtues.

It's easier to be pleasant than unpleasant—and twice as satisfactory. Just as it's easier to make money than it is to be without it.

All of which resolves itself into the fact that people who reason are always the happiest, always the most competent, always the most successful. And it is also the fact that Boston's reasoning people are counted among those who read the American.

That's why the Boston American carries the "Help Wanted" ads of discriminating, appreciative employers—and that's why alert, efficient people follow these ads closely and frequently employ "Situations Wanted" ads. of their own.

SCHOOLBOY OARSMEN IN FIRST OF TRIAL RACES ON THE CHARLES RIVER TODAY

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTING NEWS

BRITISH POLO EXPERTS ARRIVE FOR CUP GAMES AGAINST YANKEE DEFENDER

WRAY HINTS AT NEW HARVARD CREW SHAKE UP

"My last rearrangement of the varsity crew is by no means the final order for the Yale regatta," said Coach James R. Wray of Harvard today, just before departing for Red Top. "I expect, however, that by the end of the present week I will know just what positions in the shell need bolstering up."

The Harvard squad left Boston today on the 1.62 p.m. train. There were twenty-five men in the party, including Coach Wray, Arthur Beane, the freshman coxse, and Managers Aspinwall, Cobb and Felton.

Charley Hart left yesterday to see that the shells are well taken care of in transportation and to land and fit them up tomorrow morning for a short spin that all crews are expected to take in the afternoon just before sundown.

Jim Talcott of No. 2 and Lou Curtis at No. 7 have been dropped to the second eight as a result of the loss to Cornell. Both men found the strain of rowing against the speedy Ithacan eight too much on their nerve centres, and toppled over in their seats shortly before the finish of the race.

"Spider" Schall, who was carried unconscious to the boathouse after the race, will occupy No. 5 in the rearranged mid-ships.

Ernie Soucy, the strongest and best oar in the eight, will desert No. 5 for No. 7. Murray, advanced from the second boat, will row at No. 5 and Tudor Gardiner will row at No. 2.

YALE OARSMEN ARE GIVEN DOUBLE WORK AT TRAINING CAMP

GALES FERRY, Ct., June 1.—For the first time this season the Yale oarsmen faced double practice. They worked this morning at "rubbing," an innovation recommended by Coach Guy Nickalls, who is enthusiastic over it because of its success in England.

This afternoon they go over the regular course, starting from school 6 o'clock and rowing down stream to the drawbridge in New London and five miles back. The husky bunch of freshmen will await them at the navy yard and row back the last two miles up stream.

George St. John Sheffield, the rowing statistician, has arrived from his home in North Attleboro and accompanied Nickalls in the coaching launch.

The yachts Sultana, owned by Mrs. Edward H. Harriman, and the Savarona, owned by Cornelius Vanderbilt of Harvard, brought the varsity oarsmen here this morning, the craft reaching here today and will take up the oarsmen for a sail on Long Island Sound tomorrow.

Sidelights on Sports

By A. H. C. MITCHELL

FROM the looks of things the entire Washington team will be fit candidates for the insane asylum along about August 1. As it is, "Old Fox" Griffith, the manager, has headaches every night trying to solve like a two-year-old with his sixty seven years of service. The men behind him are indulging in what is known as "fighting for every point," and if they are not in padded cells before the season ends it will be because miracles are no longer in fashion.

* * *

"FIGHTING for every point" with the Washington players consists largely of surrounding the umpire on every questionable decision and ranting around whenever anything goes against them. Their tactics are the same as those of the old Clevelands in the days of Patsy Tebeau and the old Baltimores in the time of McGraw, Keeler, Kelley and Jennings.

The chances are that Mr. Ban Johnson will have to hand Mr. Griffith a gentle warning to "keep off that stuff" if the senators continue to bait the umpires the way they are doing.

* * *

UMPIRE CHILL, who is a new man in the American League, has been performing his work in a very satisfactory manner since he came to Boston. The other clubs visiting here got along all right with him, but the Washingtons are making life miserable for the little fellow.

THE truth of the matter is the Washingtons have the championship already won. They are already investing their share of the world's series receipts. They simply cannot stand still by and lose a game of ball.

* * *

THEY have some right smart players on that Washington team, but we cannot yet see any world-beaters in the team as a whole. Of course, there is Walter Johnson, almost a team in himself, but they do not seem to be so very well heeled in the matter of pitchers outside of the great Swede.

* * *

IN Foster and Shanks, however, the Senators have a couple of really first-class men. Shanks has been playing wonderful ball all season. He has developed into an outfielder of the first water and none in the league has anything on him. Also, he has been hitting the ball right keeps.

Little Foster "eats 'em up" around third base, getting them thrown away with incredible swiftness. At bat he has done as well as the best of them in the series now in progress at Fenway Park.

If he is fairly well-rounded team, but we in Boston will have to be shown a little more before we will risk much of our money for Washington to win the pennant.

J. GALLANT IS HOT AFTER GO WITH MURPHY

By JACK CONWAY.

JOHNNY GALLANT, the Chelsea lightweight with the dream-producing punch, is still camping outside of the wigwam of Eddie Murphy, South Boston's esteemed fighter. Gallant is decked out in battle array and, judging from some of the Chelsea youth's remarks, there is not anything which would please him better than a ring encounter with Murphy.

Gallant is well known to the rastic lovers of New England, as he has been boxing in these parts for these many years. Aided and abetted by Gilbert Gallant, he is not even a thirty-third degree cousin of the hard-hitting Johnny, he has kept Chelsea on the pugilistic map.

The Chelsea boxer is rated as the hardest hitting lightweight in New England. He can knock out almost any noble knight of the padded gloves who nhe can hit with one of his famous right-hand blows.

JOHNNY started after a whirl with Murphy over a week ago, but has not experienced a great deal of success. Murphy has always contended that he is a legitimate lightweight. Therefore Gallant has demanded that he make a reasonable weight for a match. He is willing to fight Murphy at 133 pounds at 2 o'clock or 135 pounds at 5 o'clock. The real lightweight limit is 133 pounds ringside, but Gallant does not intend to prevent a matter of a pound of two from getting him a "go" with the Peninsular flash.

WHEN Joe Egan recently challenged Murphy, the latter asserted that he would battle Egan unless he reduced to 135 pounds. Gallant therefore thinks it is right and proper that Murphy should meet him at this weight. Johnny is one of the few legitimate lightweights in New England and is able to make 133 pounds ringside.

EDDIE MACK, Gallant's manager, is willing to post a forfeit of $250 with the writer to bind a match between Murphy and Gallant. The Atlas A. A. is also willing to stage the tussle. From where we sit it looks as though the next move was up to Murphy.

JOE JEANETTE, the dusky Hoboken heavyweight, refused to box "Chevy" Flynn at the Atlas A. A. unless he could have the bout refereed by a New York official. He was anxious to have Charley Hickey act as the third man in the ring. It is our sad duty to relate that the Atlas Club management decided that it could conduct its shows without the services of Jeanette and a New York referee. All of which caused them to call off the proposed Jeanette-Flynn tussle.

WE do not claim that Boston's referees are infallible. It is far from being so and we have often had occasions to object to some of the decisions rendered in local rings. But we do not believe that a Gotham referee would help matters along. If Jeanette were permitted to bring his own referee here, we would look upon the bout with suspicion. There would not be any guarantee that the outside official would render a just verdict. And if he should present Jeanette with the decision, it would probably not worry him a great deal as he would be able to take the midnight train for New York where he would be obliged to listen to the angry words of the "fans."

BRITISH POLO LEADERS HERE FOR CUP GAMES

NEW YORK, June 1.—With faces as bronzed as the sea kings of old and looking fit to put up a stiff tussle, the British international polo team, headed by Lord Wimborne, has arrived here on the Cunarder Carmania.

The party was composed of Lord and Lady Wimborne, Major F. W. Barrett and Mrs. Barrett, the Duke of Peneranda, Mr. John Traill and Mrs. Traill, Captain Vivian S. Lockett, Captain Leslie St. C. Cheape and Captain H. A. Tompkinson.

Lord Wimborne is a famous nobleman and was willing to furnish all the information desired.

"We are liable to make some changes before the final nomination," said his lordship, "so it would be foolish for me to give you any particular line-up of our team just yet. Polo teams change all the time, you know, and we shall certainly live up to the custom.

FEW PRACTICE GAMES.

"We are going to Pipping Rock without further delay and, after we have been here a couple of days, will be in a position to give better information about plans of the team. We intend to engage in not more than three or four practice games altogether. We may play the first one tomorrow afternoon."

Asked if he would withhold the line-up of his team until he found out the arrangement of the American team, Lord Wimborne said he could not tell.

He smiled when asked if he thought his team would carry back the cup and told the cross-examiner that his team would try. He said that the present team was much lighter than last year's challenger and that the Americans had an advantage in having better ponies.

Both Lord Wimborne and the Duke of Peneranda are high-rated players. In the Hurlingham and Roehampton Whitney cups, Lord Wimborne played No. 2 and the Duke of Peneranda No. 1 for the Quidnunes, and the Quids came out victorious.

TITLED STARS MAY PLAY.

Lord Wimborne said on the pier that were it necessary he would take the field in the international, and it was understood that the same could be said for the Duke of Peneranda.

Although Lord Wimborne was not positive about the line-up of the British team in its first practice, there was an unofficial statement that the line-up would be:

No. 1—Captain Tompkinson.
No. 2—Captain Chape.
No. 3—Major Barrett.
Back—John Traill.

Society to Attend Westwood Races

Society people of Westwood, Dedham, Brookline and Milton, are expected to be present in large numbers next Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock, when Gymkana horse-back races will be held on Allan Forbes' polo field, in Westwood. The fete will be held under the personal direction of Miss Augusta Converse and Miss Charlotte Loring, two charming young society girls of Westwood and Boston. The proceeds will be for the benefit of the Westwood Fund for Convalescent Babies.

Rigler No Pittsburgh Favorite.

PITTSBURGH, June 1.—President John K. Tener of the National League is to be petitioned to keep Umpire Charles Rigler away from Forbes Field. The plan is to get as many signatures to the petition as possible before it is sent to headquarters. This is practically an unheard-of proceeding in a major league city. Schuyler Britton of St. Louis has made a similar request of Tener.

B. C.-Tufts Teams Are Both Ready for Big Game This Week

The Boston College varsity nine will face Tufts College for the second time this season at Fenway Park next Saturday. In the first contest staged at Medford the Medford collegians came away on the long end but only after a bitter struggle, and the second game promises to be well worth witnessing.

Extensive preparations are being made by Graduate Manager Heath of B. C. to accommodate a large number of fans. The local team will be cheered by the entire student body under the leadership of Leo Murray, the senior president and cheerleaders. Centrals of cheers and songs will be held this week.

Tickets for the contest can be procured from students of either institution or by addressing Baseball Manager Eric McKenzie, Boston College, Chestnut Hill, Newton.

STALLINGS SAYS FEDERALS LOSE IF THEY WIN

BROOKLYN, June 1.—George T. Stallings, a backer of the Brooklyn Federals, declares that the Federal league is on the verge of collapse. To outlaw movement the Big Chief attributes the discouraging lack of interest in major league baseball to date. In the opinion of this shrewd student of the Summer game the independent circuit is now attempting the last desperate throw for the stake it has lost by trying to wean away the baseball following of the two major leagues.

"Federal League agents have been very busy in the West trying to lure away all National League players they can induce them to sign contracts," said Stallings to the baseball writers who came to see him at his home in Brooklyn. "Backers of the Federal League have been bombarded with letters from Federal agents trying to induce them to sign contracts with the Federal League. Many of the players have signed these contracts, but I am willing to bet that not one of them will play with the Federal League next season.

"The Federal League is trying to get a start by raiding the National League, but it will not succeed. The players who have signed Federal League contracts will not play with the Federal League next season. They will not be able to get away with it.

Who Shall Do the Courting?

No. 1—THE GIRL WHO MAKES DEMANDS

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

EVER since the world began men have been going out on the warpath or to the chase and bringing home the fruits of their strength. Ever since the world began women have been sitting at home doing the weaving and the baking and the sewing and pinning and making themselves desirable so that men might want to lay the gifts of the chase and the spoils of war at their feet.

Has our century changed any of that? Decidedly yes in practice of living, decidedly no in practice of loving.

We women go to the offices and the factories and the stores and work side by side with men. We go to the polls and vote with men in some States and countries and shall do so more and more.

MEN THE HUNTERS

But because human nature has developed and human beings express themselves in new ways does not mean that human nature has CHANGED. Human nature has SHOWN along natural lines. Women have freedom in work and freedom in play. But men are still the hunters and conquerors, and they do not fancy seeing women come out in the open as a husband-seeker and mark down the victim she proposes to hunt.

Every day I receive dozens of letters from girls who want to know if they shall "insist" on their men friends calling a certain number of times a week. Every day some girl tells me she wrote three times to "John" and he did not answer, and then asked me what she shall do. Probably she should never have written the first letter.

Here is a sad little example that is quite typical of one of the greatest mistakes girls make:

L. M. L. writes: "I am nineteen years of age and am keeping company with a boy two years my senior. We have been together on Wednesday evenings since December and I think if he loves me as he says he should come Saturdays and Sundays, too. He objects. Should I insist?"

My dear girl — and all my dear girls in like cases—DON'T INSIST. DON'T DREAM OF INSISTING ON ANYTHING A MAN DOES NOT CHOOSE FREELY AND OF HIS OWN FREE WILL TO DO.

No man likes to be forced to give the attentions and consideration that he revels in offering—to the right woman—as a free gift. If you are not the right woman you will only disgust or amuse or anger the man you are chasing when it is his masculine prerogative and privilege to do his own hunting.

The girl who is forward cheapens herself in man's eyes for two reasons. He feels that she has not the proper self-respect, and he thinks that she has not the natural charm that will cause men to seek her freely. He does not enjoy being sought by a girl so lacking in attractiveness that other men have not sought her.

But the main reason why women fail when they try to force the issue is that all men have a natural stubbornness that makes them enjoy a struggle for what they get instead of having it handed to them. A man actually enjoys a certain amount of conflict in attaining his heart's desire. He likes lingering along the pleasant path of courtship. So when a girl struts out into the open and demands either in a business way as her right, or in a sentimental and clinging way as her supreme wish that she have more of his society than he has seen fit to give her, she antagonizes all his natural instincts.

THE PROPER WAY

If a friend of insisting that her friend call three evenings a week when he has shown a desire to come but once, L. M. L. were to suggest sweetly and pleasantly that perhaps next Wednesday evening would be engaged and another evening later in the week would do just as well, she would be far more likely to take on value in the man's eyes. Then perhaps he would be the one to insist on spending more evenings together.

The minute a girl insists on anything as her right it ceases becoming a free gift. The minute a girl talks of "rights" and insists on them a man feels chains. And chains gall men. They like the feeling of freedom; they like to be generous bestowers of gifts and not captives chained to chariot wheels.

Never demand a man's society. Make yourself so sweet and desirable that he will demand yours.

Difficult, you say? Perhaps. But in my next article I will give you a few suggestions as to how to make yourself desirable.

Up-to-Date Jokes

Among the guests at a reception was a distinguished man of letters. He was grave and somewhat taciturn. One of the women present resented to the greatest that he seemed to be out of place at such a party.

"Yes," replied the bantam, with a bright smile, "you see, he can't talk anything but sense."

A man, on being offered a bottle of hair-tonic one day at a barber's, said:

"What a nerve you have! So bald yourself, yet recommending a hair-tonic!"

"Ah," the barber replied, "it is on my assistant, whose fine head of hair you see, that we use the hair-tonic. I, on the other hand, am experimenting on the depilatory cream. Just look at my skull—smooth as a billiard ball."

"To what do you attribute your longevity?" asked the reporter.

"My which?" queried the oldest inhabitant.

"Your longevity," repeated the reporter.

"Never had it. As far as I can remember, I ain't never had no such complaint."

Milady's Summer Coiffure

Five Charming Styles Fully Described

Posed Especially for This Page by Members of the Ziegfeld Follies

BY OLIVETTE

No. 1—For sweet sixteen. No. 2—A quaint style. No. 3—"The Perfect Rose." No. 4—"The Tango Swirl." No. 5—"The Flaming Poppy."

By Olivette

THERE is almost no excuse for every girl not to be pretty this season! It is generally acknowledged that 'Woman's crowning glory is her hair," and this season the style it crowns is not limited to one pattern. With a dozen accepted methods of arranging her locks, Milady of the Spring Season has lensomed out like the flower gardens.

In the chorus of Ziegfeld's Follies of 1914 there is a posy bed of the sweetest Spring and Summer styles of flower-lovely girls, and each one offers some suggestion for the girl who wants to so arrange her coiffure as to be as lovely as Nature and the curling tongs will permit.

Number one is Julia Beaubien, who looks like the sweet daisy of the fields. She suggests youth and wholesome charm, with her hair plaited loosely into a braid in the style so becoming to the natural girl in her teens. Above this braid her curly locks are parted low on the left side, and arranged in such full softness on either side of this parting that her coiffure suggests an unconventional pompadour rather than the ordinary part.

Number two is a pansy-faced girl named Daisy Virginia. She brushes her dark hair, smooth and lustrous, and parts it in the middle, pulling it low on her forehead in two deep waves, and then gracefully down over her ears into a soft knot at the back. A hair dressing of this sort gives to a girl's face the quaint charm of the old-fashioned garden.

Next is Gladys Feldman, whose coiffure is done with the cultivated elegance of the gardener's joy—the perfect rose. The hair is parted just to the left of the centre and marcelled into deep and regular undulations. Soft little tendril curls are pulled out over the ears and down on the forehead to take any harshness from the parting. The back of the head is covered by a puff of the hair which supports a Spanish comb thrust in at a slant.

Number four is the exotic gardenia, Eleanor Dell, who wears her hair in the new style known variously as the French twist and the tango swirl. The hair is pulled up to the crown of the head and coiled tightly away from the ears and nape of the neck, and then thrust under its own twist to form a cushion of smooth-lying hair. Then it is pulled loosely over the forehead and allowed to shadow the ears in front enough to insure becomingness.

Hazel Lewis, who is pictured in the fifth place, represents the flaming poppy type, with her hair as softly luxurious as the colorful leaves of the scarlet flower that is her prototype. The hair is parted in the middle and draped loosely over the ears. Then it is caught high to the crown of the head, where it is banded in a circle about a soft Psyche puff that is done crosswise.

One of these styles will be becoming to you, surely. What flower type of loveliness do you represent? Make sure, and then arrange your hair to accent it.

Luck often favors those who don't believe in her:

The girl who lets her parents pick out her husband for her has none one on whom to blame it if her marriage does not go well.

Distance lends enchantment to the view when we don't have to walk back—or aren't looking back at folks we don't like!

Knowledge is power. Now, how does it happen that most old maids are smart?

Every woman who accepts a man's challenge to the old "duel of sex" can be reached if not conquered. For it is the approaches to her heart a woman must defend. If the enemy marches within sight of it, the citadel turns traitor!

DREAMING OF A STAR

A dream of you when the lights are low
And a hush creeps over the hill,
When the brooding gloom comes slowly down
When the world is calm and still;
In the twilight hours a dream of you,
When the stars come out, my dream comes true—
But it costs me a dollar, or maybe two,
For a Broadway star's not cheap to view!

IF WE KNEW

Suppose we knew at twenty-five
What we shall know if we survive
To man's full age,
Do you suppose we'd work and strive
To fill life's page?
Would Hope, his torch a-kindling cry;
"The mountain-top is far and high,
And small the gain;
But Lo! 'Tis worth the while to try
Tho' toil be vain."
Or would Joy, crowned with crimson flowers
A-smiling, lead to fragrant bowers
And murmur: "Why
Not sing and dance thru fleeting hours
Before we die?"
I think that if we knew in youth
Life's bitter-sweet of lies and truth,
We still would climb—
Thru all the woe and pain and ruth
To heights sublime.

"Sing, O singer, sing!" cried the poet old,
From his attic room, gray and bare and cold.
Sick and poor and sad — lacking everything.
Still, a voice on blinge bade his heart to sing.

"Sing, O singer, sing!" And he'd lift his eyes
Past the roofs and towers to the gloomy skies;
Love and hope were dead; gone was life with spring.
Still, he heard a voice urging him to sing:

"Sing, O singer, sing!" lacking other friend;
Still, his heart must go singing to the end.
Health and youth were gone; life held galling sting.
Bear it all, sad heart, for thy gift to sing!

Properly Rebuked

A small boy who was sitting next to a very haughty lady in a crowded car felt an itching in a most annoying manner. At last the lady could bear it no longer, and turned to the lad.

"Boy, have you got a handkerchief?" she demanded.

The small boy looked at her for a few seconds, and then, in a dignified tone, came the answer.

"Yes, I have, but I don't lend it to strangers."

CHAPTER SIX.

Marianne Is Discovered

EVERY night since her first adventure Marianne had risked her life in the same way for her country.

Every night, after Dulcie had been put to bed and was soundly sleeping in the room with her mother, the huge telegraph appliance had been dragged out from the closet, where it was kept in the daytime, and reel after reel of wire paper was torn off at the casements of the room.

It was a time Marianne had dreaded and feared, for discovery had hastily disconnected the wires and dragged the heavy thing back to a place of concealment. And then later, laughing at her foolishness, she had carried it patiently back again, made the connections and stowed away her precious evidence.

THE PRUSSIANS ARRIVE

And then came the night after the dreadful battle when every one in the Prussian camp had met to discuss the terrible defeat France had suffered. And Marianne, in her big attic room, sublimely unconscious of the fact that suspicion had at last been attached to the out of the way telegraph station, was, as usual, busily at work listening to the messages flying across the line. A little line of worry showed from time to time on her forehead; things did not seem to be going as well as usual, and very few things of importance had been transmitted. The wire had been free most of the evening, and in a space neutral the footfall rarely over at Dijole lying peacefully asleep on her pillow.

Then she turned back to her work again and, at the same moment, there was a succession of sounds downstairs. Marianne, busy at her work, heard nothing, and if she did, it was a common matter for messengers to arrive at any moment, and she thought nothing of it. But downstairs a company of Prussians had arrived and were asking some hurried questions about the occupants of the station. As they had come up they had stopped outside the gate, and there was a tiny lighted window very near some wires which looked suspicious.

"Who rooms upstairs?" said the commander brusquely.

"Mrs. Marteau and her little daughter are in one room," replied General Ramage, surprised at the sudden visit from his superior officer, "and some of our men are in the other."

"Who is this Mrs. Marteau, was she here when you took the station?"

"She is the wife of the telegraph operator," answered Ramage, "and she has given us very little trouble of any kind. In fact she nursed one of our men as carefully as if he had been her own brother until he died some few days ago."

"Never mind that now," said the commander, "we have good reason to believe that our wires have been tampered with somewhere, and suspicion seems to have been attached to this place. It's the only station that we have taken, and we are certain of double work somewhere, so we are making investigations."

CAUGHT!

Ramage laughed. "Well I don't believe you'll find anything here," he said confidently. "Do you want to call Mrs. Marteau down?"

The commander stepped hastily to the door where a crowd of the men waited outside. Then he went out himself and there was silence on the room and on the out. One of the men had been ordered to climb the roof and look into the lighted room so suspiciously near the twisted wires, and there was quiet everywhere as he carefully jumped the fence, and climbed the low sloping roof. Inside Marianne, absorbed in the business of reading over the information she had gleaned that evening, did not hear the slight crackling of the tin under the man's cautious feet. But she sensed suddenly and decided that she had worked enough for the night. Suddenly there was a more decided noise as the footstep came nearer, and then a voice spoke out of the stillness, and her hands clenched—she knew what had come without turning around.

"Throw up your hands," said that calm voice evenly. And then a revolver was levelled at her and there was a sound of many feet downstairs.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

HIS ADVICE IS GOOD

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl of eighteen and am madly in love with a young man the same age. He has been courting me there most three years. The other night I asked him what his intentions were, since he earns very little and has no future. To my astonishment, he told me "to try and forget" him and to look for another, because he could never support me. I feel that I would not part with him, as the shock will kill me.

SUCH talk, after three years courtship, is brutal, I admit, but there is some sense in it. He can't afford to marry. A long engagement is unfair to you, so do as he says; forget him. He will be more interested in you if you make the effort.

LET IT BE J

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a girl of twenty-four and have two gentlemen friends. It is very wealthy and willing to marry me. He is willing to support my mother and three younger sisters. I is the man I love and he has also proposed to me, but he is too poor to support my mother and three younger sisters. WORKING GIRL.

A marriage to D would prove unhappy for you, though he supported all your relatives. Follow your heart. The problem of your mother and three sisters will find some other solution. I am sure they would not ask you to sacrifice yourself for their sake.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK

"I SEE where some of our nicest young girls, at one of our nicest young girl colleges, is being sued by another girl that they hazed something brutal," said the Manicure Lady. "You wouldn't think a lot of little fluffies like that would go and torture one of their mates, would you?"

"I'd think most anything nowadays," said the Head Barber. "It don't seem as if education or social position is no drawback to the queer way folks is living now. I ain't so surprised at what these college girls did as if it had been done by a lot of farmer lasses."

"They didn't do a thing to this girl that is suing," said the Manicure Lady. "They beat her and pinched her and stuck pins into her and threw her into a bathtub full of ice-cold water, and fed her cold spaghetti and then told her she had ate angleworms, and altogether gave her such a raw deal that she has broke completely down. Even if she gets some money out of them, she won't never be well again. I'm glad now that I didn't go to no girl school except the public school. Of course I didn't learn no Greek there, but I didn't learn no meanness either, and just as long as I got education enough to talk grammar intelligent and refined, that is about all I need. I haven't saw many of them college girls that talks more correct than me."

"Women is crueler than men," declared the Head Barber.

"How can you say that?" demanded the Manicure Lady. "Why, George, women is sentler and kinder than any man could be. I am surprised at you."

"I was only going by what you just told me about the hazing," said the Head Barber. "I never heard of a bunch of college boys hazing one of their victims as rough as that. I don't mean that women is usually cruel, but I mean that when they are cruel the female of the race is more deadly than the gents. The squaws used to be crueler torturing white men than the Indians themselves, and nothing but a woman would have invented a weapon as cruel as a rolling pin. A man would have some chance if his wife used a broom, but a good, hardwood rolling pin slammed against his bean is the last word in modern war. Yes, sir, when women are cruel they can beat any man at it."

"Well, anyhow, I think that hazing ought to be repressed in the schools and colleges," said the Manicure Lady. "The young men don't often have a chance to go to college, but are afraid for fear they will get handled so rough when they reach there. That ain't no way for young people to act when their parents send them there to get a education. You bet if a bunch of dolls tried to haze me I wouldn't bother suing them. I would know every one of them before they got through, and I would get even with every one unless it took me the rest of my born days. I would be like the Count of Monte Cristo, the gent that got even with all of his enemies and kept count till the last debt was paid. I'd like to see anybody haze me."

"You don't need to get excited," said the Head Barber. "You ain't at no college now. Nobody has even spoke a scrap word to you since you have been here, and nobody better while I am around."

"You are awful noble, George," said the Manicure Lady. "Your folks ought to have named you Ivanhoe."

Household Hints

Kid gloves can be cleaned at home by putting them to steep in a basin of gasoline, then rubbing them well with a hot, clean flannel, and hanging them out to dry. But such drastic cleaning will not be necessary for a long time if a little attention is frequently given to the gloves. French chalk and fuller's earth mixed together and rubbed into the slightly soiled parts with a bit of clean flannel will prolong indefinitely the life of both light and dark hued gloves.

To stop a chimney burning, close the doors and throw two or three handfuls of salt on the fire. The reason for the efficacy of this method is that salt generates muriatic acid gas, which is a prompt extinguisher of fire. If the entrance to the chimney be constantly swept round when the grate is cleaned the danger of fire is reduced to a minimum.

Resinol will stop that itch

The moment that Resinol ointment touches itching skin the itching stops and healing begins. FORBES SAYS WILSON ADDS UNCERTAINTY TO BUSINESS DEPRESSION

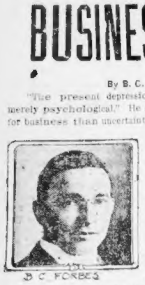
By B. C. FORBES, Business Editor.

"The present depression in business," says President Wilson, "is merely psychological." He also declares that "nothing is more dangerous for business than uncertainty."



B. C. FORBES

Well spoken.

And how, think you, does he propose to cure our psychological depression and the prevailing uncertainty?

By removing grounds for uneasiness and uncertainty, by calling a halt in anti-business legislation until the new tariff and the new currency laws can be digested?

No.

He proposes to banish psychological troubles and business uncertainty by forcing an unwilling Congress to rush through a series of anti-business bills which not even their authors understand and the effect of which no man in either business or politics can gauge!

To cure uncertainty the President prescribes an unlimited dose of fresh uncertainty!

The congressional chemists may hesitate to compound the conglomeration ordered and the business patients may balk at having to swallow it, but the doctor has issued his instructions, and must, apparently, be obeyed.

The whole thing is dislocantering.

WOES ARE ONLY IMAGINARY.

Are your sales falling off? My dear sir, your troubles are only imaginary. There is really nothing the matter with your business.

Have you lost your job through a grave reduction in orders? Don't banish your despair. You are not badly off; you simply think you are. Whimsical. Your woes are purely psychological.

Are you having difficulty in collecting money due you? And are you worrying about how you are going to survive, while the latter remains, your rent, taxes, insurance and other expenses? Don't be foolish. Don't worry. Smile, you idiot! All you need is to take a psychological pill, and, presto! your profits will rise by leaps and bounds.

Are you an investor and nervous over the advance in your company's earnings and stoppage of your dividends? What's the matter with you, you? Can't you see that nothing is really wrong?

All that has happened is that your psychological condition is out of tune. Brace up, man! If the butcher, the grocer or the baker kicks because you have no money to pay for your food, why, just tell them to be assured—explain to them that they will find this is very delightful, prosperous, merry world if they only will assure themselves that it is so. Tell them to cultivate the right psychological frame, and everything will run along with idyllic smoothness!

HEARD WHERE IMPROVED.

If you don't believe all this, or if you can't make your clamoring creditors believe it, just read this comforting assurance issued officially from the White House last week:

"The President says he is aware that while he was aware of the present depression of business, there was abundant evidence that it was merely psychological, that there is no material condition of substantial reason why the business of the country should not be in the most prosperous and expanding condition."

See, business SHOULD BE "in the most prosperous and expanding condition."

Will you say it isn't?

Well, whose fault is it?

It is your own, the President tells you.

Don't try to put any of the blame upon the government.

Don't seek to explain that the administration has passed a slightly revolutionary tariff bill that is flooding the country with unprecedented brushes of foreign-made goods and is now draining us of gold at the rate of $200,000,000 a month.

Don't whimper that your psychological shortcomings were aggravated by the appearance at Washington of the so-called "Five Brothers," for were you not later told not to be frightened at them, as their own father wouldn't recognize them after they ran the gauntlet of the committeemen?

Don't childishly declare that you are uneasy over the possible consequences were all the strange, loose-jointed legislative puppets now standing on the Washington stage let loose upon the business world.

Don't straddle your psychological shortcomings. If you own railroad securities, be the clamor-throwing which the Interstate Commerce Commission's decision it will indulge in following the highly successful experiment in showing St. Paul shares to bring dividends, has knocked out the stock's market value by that one little delusion, and bigger ones were probably in store.

Be a sport. Acknowledge that the Administration has not sold or done one thing to cause the business world the slightest uneasiness. Admit that every one of the Democratic party's most lovable, helpful, comforting fellow wiseacres should have immediately begun to shower congratulations upon the President. Or admit that the many legislative specimens that have since been trotted down one and all borne the stamp of consummate statesmanship, of deep insight into business and economics on the part of their authors, and have revealed scrupulous care not to interfere with one legitimate commercial function.

FULL OF SOLICITUDE.

The government, bless your soul, has exhibited the most tender solicitude for your material welfare. So, too, have the Interstate Commerce Commissioners.

They have cared for you and shielded you and protected you from every conceivable danger of worriment. They have made your state of mind their special concern, and have left undone nothing calculated to inspire confidence and cheerfulness and determination to forge ahead successfully.

Do all to whom every other plant in the garden is flourishing like a green bay tree say your psychology is wrong? Do they call you a victim of fiscal loading of the governmental wardrobe?

To write to answer you: May I suggest that President Wilson, before finally howschlipping Congress into jamming through a chaotic mass of anti-business legislation, pause to consider what has been done by European statesmen in regard to business.

David Lloyd George, the most radical and revolutionary statesman Britain has ever known, has never once in the course of his whole drastic policy attempted to lay a hand upon the business "processes" of the country. He has hit out right and left, but he has been careful not to interfere with the nation's commercial machinery. It is a thing too delicate to be tampered with rashly or lightheartedly.

And what of Germany? There the whole power of the government is utilized not in fearful business organizations apart or in insisting upon competition under any and every circumstance, but in aiding and encouraging and furthering business of every shape and form with results that have amazed the world.

STOP! LOOK! LISTEN!

Let me implore you, while it is time for the United States government to Stop! Look! Listen!

Ex-President Roosevelt's first gun in the political campaign should carry terror to many Washington politicians, for it will be no revival in trade before the Fall polling, the speculation of traders will undergo marked change, An idle man or one suffering from hard times is not apt to become enthusiastic over the party in power.

Washington's attitude toward business is so much more important than any other single consideration at this moment that no apology is necessary for devoting so much space to it.

Trade is still halting. The security markets are stagnant. Today's government report on cotton is expected, in addition to showing rather serious damage, although other crop prospects are still gratifying. Meager railroad reports are breaking all records and heavy shipments of gold are being made to Europe in payment therefor. Interest rates, however, remain very easy save for temporary loans, but capital available for permanent investment is still extremely timid, mainly because of nervousness over the position at Washington—aggravated latterly, of course, by the disgraceful New Haven disclosures and impending railroad investigations.

LATEST STOCK MARKETS

By W. H. ROSS, Financial Editor

Stocks were irregular and markets torpid today. Early in the afternoon in New York gains included Canadian Pacific ¾, Missouri Pacific 1, and American Beet Sugar 1¼, while among the declines were Southern Pacific, ex-dividend, ¼, Reading ⅜, New Haven ⅝, American Telephone ½, American Can ⅛, Steel, ex-dividend, ⅝, Amalgamated ⅜, American Smelting ⅝, Baltimore & Ohio ¼, and Union Pacific, ex-dividend, ⅛.

In Boston New Haven was off a point and Boston & Maine was up 1. American Telephone had shaded.

LOWER LEVEL AT START.

Prices were on a slightly lower level at the start in New York, although several recovered their dividends and Missouri Pacific was strong. During the morning that point sold as high as 13½. The time for depositing for extension notes for $25,000,000, due today, expires this afternoon. Last week approximately eighty per cent. of the notes were deposited. It is hoped that the bulk of the remainder will come in. Finance directors of the road hold another meeting today. After the market closes a statement from them may be made. George J. Gould has stated he is ready to retire as chairman of the board if reasonably assured that he and his associates and family in the road will be properly cared for.

"Before he lets go his hold," it is stated, "Gould wants to know what sort of capital readjustment is contemplated and what this will amount to. He also wants to see some one thing to say about, or at least know, who will be the directors of the road and possess a reasonable organization."

SOME STOCKS RALLIED.

Around the end of the first hour some stocks rallied and the tone seemed a trifle firmer. But there was no increase in the volume of business, transactions in New York amounting to not total quite 25,000 shares, and for the second only account for 50,000 shares considered as a whole, was irregular up to afternoon. Not only was trading in standard issues on a small scale, but their price range was narrow. The fact that the London market was closed yesterday and today on this side, Many followers of the market who left London on the eve of the holiday had not returned.

What development there had been over the Mexican situation in regard to Mexican affairs was considered encouraging. But there had been no change in the general situation. Crop prospects remained the strongest bull factor. Administration with the trend of legislation and the attitude of the Wilson administration were the principal bear influences.

BEET SUGAR ADVANCED.

One of the few features of the market was the early advance of American Beet Sugar, which was quite active for a few moments, being bought because it was rumored that the government is reconsidering a change in the sugar schedule so as to retain a duty of a cent a pound on the commodity, which under the Payne law would be admitted duty free after 1916.

In spite of statements that the Interstate Commerce Commission will not decide for several months whether Eastern railroads shall be allowed to charge higher freight rates, belief is strongly held in some important circles that the verdict will not be delayed much longer. Several large operators expect it this week. Unfavorable decision is now believed to be in store if will be rendered, and as to what will be its purport are among the things which are present rendering the speculation. Optimism in regard to how the commission will treat the roads is not so general.

BOSTON & MAINE SOLD HIGHER.

The Boston market opened very dull and stayed so. Business was so confined as it has been for some time. Boston & Maine, which closed Friday at 33, rose a point and a half during the first hour. By noontime it had suffered some recession, but was still showing a point gain. New Haven declined a point. Electric and United Fruit were stagnant. There was not enough trading to excite any interest. Butte & Superior was fractionally lower while Granby advanced some, and there was a small gain for Alaska Gold.

The Boston bank statement for last week showed that surplus reserve decreased $479,715.

NO SESSION IN LONDON.

There was no session of the London Stock Exchange today, this being "Whit Monday," but it will reopen tomorrow. It is believed that sentiment will be better when business is resumed. Expectation of easier money prevails.

The Berlin Bourse at the end of May witnessed the easiest settlement period known in years. The contango rate was the lowest for a long time. The position carried forward, it is called, "is unusually liquid and the demand for money slight, with the settlement of November affairs upon it. In Paris, where there will be no market today, traders are viewing about everything with more optimism. The Bank of France had never before such a large stock of gold in reserve as now. In fact, reports from the whole European markets are encouraging, and this should be felt in those in this country. Foreign selling of American securities has been a very bearish influence upon the latter.

FINANCIAL NEWS IN BRIEF.

There will be a battle in the House today over the amendment which labor organizations want made to the Clayton bill for repealing trusts, but a vote on the labor exemption section is not expected before tomorrow.

The National Surety Company estimates that $40,000,000 were stolen in this country last year by defaulters. Meagre salaries and business depressions are blamed.

The steel industry is improving. Last week contracts for about 50,000 tons of steel bars, pipe and plates were placed by railroads, who ordered 3,376 cars in May, 50,000 more than the 2,869 in their own shops. The latter will require about 30,000 tons of rolled steel products.

It is reported that for the first four months of this year the gross business of Montgomery Ward & Co. showed a comparative increase of about $7,000,000.

The following stocks were ex-dividend in the Boston market: Concord & Montreal R. R. classes 1, 2, 3 and 4 each $1.75; Connecticut River R. R. $5; Fitchburg preferred $1.25; General Electric $2; Kerr Lake $1; and Keweenaw Copper was quoted $1 assessment paid.

Incorporations in Massachusetts for May numbered 122 and the authorized capital of the new companies totalled $11,599,000.

Auto News

By J. C. KERRISON.

Since the announcement of the rules governing the run of the Chicago Auto Club to Boston, with the Glidden Trophy as the chief prize, there has been diverse comment on the action of the committee of the A. A. A. in barring last year's winner, the Metz, from competing this year. Consensus of opinion seems to be that at least the Metz Company should have the privilege of defending the trophy. Admirers of this little gearless type condemn the committee's action. They say it is bound to affect future contests for the Glidden Trophy. It is known that in the past few years there have been doubts as to the advisability of running the tour at all owing to lack of entries. The deed of gift governing the trophy has been construed and "misconstrued."

"We won it last year and demonstrated the ability of the gearless type of transmission to compete with the best gear cars in the country regardless of price or power. We captured the trophy and we were willing to contest for it again this year," said Manager Schwartz of the Metz Company.

The police of the West Roxbury district are still prosecuting motorists for failing to slow down and give a signal on Walk Hill and intersecting streets, and at the intersection of Washington street and Asticou road, near the Forest Hills station.

"That trucks will prove a saving on short hauls as well as long is evidenced by the repeat orders placed by teaming companies who make a business of contract work with factories to haul goods from freight depot to factory warehouse and return, most always a short haul," says Norman Hall, the manager of Mack Motor Truck Company, Mr. Hallidey says that over a year ago T. Tubby & Co., a big local teaming company, bought one Mack truck for freight hauling. They have just placed an order for two more Mack machines for the same kind of service.

Here Is a Man Who Wants to Die Usefully

Rather Hard to Do in Times of Peace. Easy in Time of War

Copyright, 1914, by the Star Company

We publish here a letter, written apparently in good faith. The man's name and address are withheld at his request:

Editor Boston AMERICAN:

Dear Sir—As one lost in a maze of conflicting thoughts, I write you because I believe that your position places you in touch with the pulse of life and that, maybe, you can help me solve the greatest of questions to me, namely, how I can devote or give (die) my life so that in some extraordinary way I can benefit humanity.

I have no money, but am only too glad to give my services, say, to some hospital for the experimenting of serum or something of a like nature, something that would uplift humanity.

I am twenty-nine and no defelict. I am at a loss to know what to do, so I write you for help.

This letter is written from the heart and with deep sincerity of purpose.

Thanking you for the courtesy of a reply and ready to avail myself of any worthy suggestion, I am sincerely yours,

W. A. B.

There are in this world, fortunately, millions of men anxious to live usefully, and some thousands ready and anxious to DIE usefully.

THAT IS WHY THIS WORLD HAS MADE SO MUCH PROGRESS IN A FEW HUNDRED THOUSAND YEARS.

There has been always a man ready to risk his life, and always a man ready to work patiently year after year without noise and without attracting attention.

Those willing to die spectacularly and those willing to live in a dull but useful way have built up the world.

What could this man who writes us do?

He might write to the directors of some great hospital and say: "Use my body and add to scientific knowledge." That would doubtless interest the doctors; it might do some good.

He might now enlist in the army, watch eagerly for the chance to do something that others would be afraid to do—and set a good example in his death, or achieve success in life—in case our army should move.

Of course, the most useful thing that a man can do IS TO GO ON LIVING AND WORKING USEFULLY.

We need hundreds of millions of men, working through hundreds of thousands of years, to make this world what it ought to be.

As long as there are swamps to be drained, dry lands to be irrigated, hard work to be done, no man should be in a hurry to leave the earth, even for the sake of a very useful or highly spectacular end.

But it takes all kinds of devotion to make up the sum of human heroism, as it takes all kinds of individuals to make up the human race.

The wonderful thing about that little insect we call a human being is his intense desire to be useful, to do something, TO BE TALKED ABOUT, no matter at what cost.

We have seen one old Greek philosopher living beyond fourscore, and killing himself because he stumbled as he left his class.

We have seen another, anxious to impress the mind of the vulgar, throwing himself into the open, flaming mouth of a volcano, which he probably regretted as he went sneezing and coughing toward the hot lava below.

We have the eccentric Italian genius d'Annunzio saying that in a few years, before he is fifty, he will die in a strange and mysterious way. The probability is that he will go right on living, and writing about himself as usual. But he enjoys the thought of mysterious death now.

We have the legend of the heroic young Roman who leaped into the chasm when the ground split wide open in the city of Rome—he saved the city, because the ground, pleased with its human meal, closed up again.

We have the long line of vestal virgins, leading a very dull life to keep the sacred fire going—that was in the days when they didn't have any matches and it was hard to start a fire, especially when it was raining. The vestals and the religious persons didn't know that they merely represented the lack of matches, and it was just as well.

We have had all the heroes of all the battles and of all the armies—the blind Bohemian king riding into battle, slashing right and left, that he might die fighting; the heroic young Frenchman whose name is still called when his regiment is reviewed—he was considered an unusual hero, because he died when there was nobody there to applaud him, shouting a warning with the enemy's spears against his breast to save the lives of his fellows.

There was the slave who hated to be forgotten, and who burned the Temple of Diana at Ephesus that his name might be remembered.

And there are the little American gentlemen who carefully select their straw hats, and their neckties, and their collars, and their funny clothing this Spring, instead of selecting more carefully their thoughts and their ambitions.

It is in many ways a queer world, in every way an interesting world. We present our compliments to our reader, twenty-nine years old, who wants to die "so that in some extraordinary way I can benefit humanity."

And we sincerely hope that he may LIVE, so that in some ORDINARY way he may be useful. For that is about the best thing that happens to the majority of us, and is probably the best thing that can happen to ANY of us.

Must Marriage Mar a Woman's Career?

By EDWIN MARKHAM

ELIA W. PEATTIE, in her novel, "The Precipice," looks at the woman question from many points of view. The heroine has been appointed chief of the Bureau of Women and Children at Washington, D. C. Her suitor wishes her to give up this great public and social service, for which she is uniquely fitted, and come to make a home for him. Thus she faces the question (but this, however, is not Kate's final word to Karl):

"I am so blessed in you," whispered Karl, 'so completed by you, that I cannot let you go on even to great usefulness and great goodness. I tell you, your place is here in my home. It is safe here, for I see you venturing on to that precipice of loneliness and fame on which none but sad and lonely women stand. Stay with me! Be my wife!'

"'I mean to be the mother to many, many children, Karl,' she said, in a voice which thrilled with sorrow and pride and a strange joy. 'To thousands and thousands of children. But for the idea I represent and the work I mean to do they would be trampled in the dust of the world.

"'Can't you see that I am called to this as men are called to honorable services for their country? This is a woman's form of patriotism. It's a higher one than the soldier's, I think. It's come my way to be the banner-carrier, and I'm glad of it. I take my chance and my honor just as you would take your chance and your honor.'

"If that 'no' thundered in Karl's ears the night through, while he kept the company of his ancient comforters, the mountains, no less did it beat shatteringly in the ears of the woman who had spoken it. 'No' to the deep and mystic human joys; 'no' to the most holy privilege of woman; 'no' to light, laughter and a dancing heart; 'no' to the lowly, satisfying labor of a home.

"For her the steep path, alone; for her the precipice. From it she might behold the sunrise and all the glory of the world, but no exalted sense of duty or of victory could blind her to its solitude and to its danger.

"Yet now, if ever, women must be true to the cause of liberty. There had been, through all the ages, willing martyrs to the general good. Now it was laid upon them to assume the responsibilities of a new crusade, to undertake a fresh martyrdom, and this time it was for themselves.

"Leagued against them was half—quite half—of their sex. Vanity and prettiness, dalliance and dependence were their characteristics. With a shrug of half-bared shoulders they dismissed all those who, painfully, nobly, gravely, were fighting to restore woman's connection with reality—to put her back, sanction, into the procession; to make, by new methods, the 'coming lady' as essential to the Commonwealth as was the old-time chatelaine before commercialism filched her vocations and left her the most cultivated and useless of parasites.

"Oh, it was no little thing for which she was fighting. Kate tried to console herself with that. If she passionately desired to create an organization which should exercise parental powers over orphaned or poorly guarded children; still more did she wish to set an example of efficiency for women, illustrating to them with how firm a step woman might tread the higher altitudes of life, making an achievement, not a compromise of labor.

"It was not the hour for her to choose her own pleasure. She must march to battle leaving love behind, as the heroic had done since love and combat were known to the world."

In-Shoots

Though all men were born equal, it is apparent that the silver spoons did not go around.

Almost any woman can assume a flashlight photo expression without being very much surprised.

Do not banker for the dead man's shoes. The chances are they would be too large for you.

Why the Nebular Hypothesis Is Discarded

By EDGAR LUCIEN LARKIN

Q.—"EXACTLY what is the nebular hypothesis and does it still hold?"

A.—The original nebular hypothesis of La Place was that the space now occupied by the entire solar system and far beyond was filled with "fire-mist," a hot gas. This cooled, contracted, began to rotate so fast that matter bulged out over its equator. Contraction kept on, and the equatorial mass was abandoned, and left as a revolving ring. In the fullness of seons of time this ring became a planet, the first being Neptune, 2,750,000,000, and so on to the last, Mercury, 36,000,000 miles from the sun.

The sun now rotates in twenty-five days, but this is not fast enough to give an equatorial bulge like that 12½ miles deep around the earth's equator. The sun is exactly round. But this theory of La Place has no followers now, and were that great mathematician now alive he would be the first to discard it. So many new discoveries of nature's laws have been made since his death that it is untenable.

First, rare gas in frigid space cannot be hot. The great law of conservation of energy, discovered since La Place, overthrows this idea of primordial cosmic heat. And rings could not have been abandoned, nor have consolidated into one planet each if they could have parted from the shrinking sphere of gas.

The far more reasonable hypothesis is the meteoric, first advanced by T. Norman Lockyear and of late advocated by Professor Chamberlain, as the planitesimal theory. That is, all suns and worlds whatever were made by meteors falling in. And the process is in a state of activity now, but in a far less degree, for meteors still fall on earth. And when a huge sun has formed, it attracted worlds out of space like the earth, Mars, Saturn, etc., and balanced them upon regular orbits between centripetal force and opposite centrifugal tendency.

A Nature Interpreter

By REV. THOMAS B. GREGORY

NATURE! How often the word is upon our lips. But what does it mean? What is Nature? and what is its message to us?

William Wordsworth, who settled up his earthly accounts sixty-five years ago, went a great way toward helping us to answer this very important question.

As an interpreter of Nature, he took the step which Chaucer and Shakespeare never took—he explored the virtues which reside in the symbol, he described objects as they affected human hearts, he showed how the inflowing world is a material image through which the Sovereign Mind holds intercourse with Man.

Foremost and alone as the poet of the common and the familiar, not indeed of the wit and merriment of things, but of the tenderness and thoughtfulness in them. Such was the once deserted and long neglected Sage of Rydal Mount, a true man and true poet, whose star, because it was a real star and not a mere will o' the wisp, kept its place in the heavens despite the smoke that the critics started, and is now steadily rising.

Wordsworth was a student of Nature from the higher—perhaps we should say highest—levels, and his conclusions are correspondingly elevated. The intellectually alert, the clean-minded, the sincere and serious find in him an unfailing source of inspiration and joy.

He is retired as noonday dew
Or fountain in a noonday grove,
And you must love him ere to you
He will seem worthy of your love.

Wordsworth's greatest piece of work is the little poem on the "Intimations of Immortality," a masterpiece that every one should know by heart. Nothing finer was ever written by man.

WOMAN A PUZZLE

She Has All the Contradictory Human Characteristics a Man Has Not

By DOROTHY DIX

WHEN the Lord made man he took all the contradictory human characteristics that he had left over and jumbled them together, and made woman out of them.

A woman is of frailer physique than man, YET she can stand ten times as much suffering.

She is afraid of a mouse, BUT she will climb up on an operating table with a smile on her face, knowing she is going to be cut to pieces and that death waits for her at every scratch of the knife.

The sight of a suffering dog turns her faint with pity, BUT she voluntarily faces the agony of crucifixion in motherhood.

She has hysterics if her seamstress ruins a new shirtwaist, BUT she meets ruin with the calm courage of a hero.

She would not walk five miles on a pleasure tramp, BUT she can break the long endurance pedestrian record in walking a sick baby.

She may look as innocent as a cooing babe, YET be as worldly wise and scheming as Becky Sharp.

She may appear to be a three-ply idiot, YET be a Solomon in petticoats.

She may love a man well enough to die for him, YET nag him so that she makes him wish he was dead.

She will do everything on earth to make her husband happy, EXCEPT the one thing that would make him happy.

She strives to make home pleasant for her family, BUT she will never let them do what they like in it if she can help herself.

She is strong for the truth, BUT she wants her husband to lie to her about her growing more beautiful every year, and how miserable he was when he had to leave her behind when he went on a pleasure trip.

She believes in justice, EXCEPT where her own children are concerned.

She keeps no books and has no budget and runs a house hit or miss financially, BUT she does it for about half what the most accomplished man financier could.

She will pay fifty dollars for a hat without turning a hair, THEN have fits over a fifty cent luncheon check.

She gives millions to foreign missions, BUT withholds the tip from a poor dairy waitress.

She will be filled with compassion for the oppressed in foreign lands, YET work her own maid fourteen hours a day.

She can be a noble Christian woman, YET treat a daughter-in-law or a mother-in-law with more savage cruelty than a red Indian would show in torturing an enemy to death.

She can believe anything she wants to believe, AND disbelieve anything she doesn't want to believe.

She can see through a millstone, OR be blind as a bat at will.

She is never happy UNLESS she is miserable.

Her idea of having a real good time is to cry on the bosom of a sympathetic friend, AND she prefers three-handkerchief tragedies to bright and cheery plays.

Her ideal of a perfect husband is a man who remembers the time he first met her, and the day he proposed to her, and her birthday and wedding anniversaries, AND if he will send her violets on these occasions he may starve her the balance of the time, and she'll still think she made a great match.

Her idea of a bad husband is a man who merely works like a slave to support his family AND never pays his wife compliments.

No man ever guessed the riddle that we call woman. Providence never intended that she should. Otherwise there would be no more marriages, for it's man's curiosity about woman that leads him to place his neck in the halter.

An Englishman's Letters

From J. Percy Smith-Brown, Esquire, Hotel Pazazza, Boston, to H. Therington Bellingham-Cholomondly (pronounced Chumly) The Towers, Chorlton-cum-Hardy, Cirencester, near Stoke-Pennington the Lesser, Hants, England.

DEAR OLD TOP—This is an extraordinary country, over here.

Extraordinary thing, by the bye, dear old chap, to have to say "ovah heah" when I mean this bally country. At home, you know, when we say "ovah heah" we mean England, and when we mean America we blooming well say "ovah theah."

Over heah it is completely changed around from over theire, and, 'pon my honour, my brain gets dizzy trying to remember that I must say "ovah heah" when I mean the States and 'ovah theah' when I mean dear old England. Deuced puzzling, eh, that 'ovah theah' should be "ovah heah" and "ovah heah" should be "ovah theah?"

Anyway, it's a dashed extraordinary country over there—bang it all, I should say over here.

I was walking along a street the other afternoon, accompanied by a leading American named Vincent Breezer—rather a smart sort of beggar, although he never quite gets the point of the English jokes I tell him.

"Hi!," suddenly exclaimed Breezer, "look at that bull."

I was a bit too smart to let the beggar spoof me—I wasn't born yesterday, old man—so I pretended I didn't hear him.

"On the level," he went on, "that bull's got his eye on you."

I fancied there was some bally joke about a bull's-eye, so I laughed loudly to show how well I had got the English sense of humour.

"Don't chaff me, my dear fellow," said I. "One would imagine that one was in a blasted farmyard to hear you chatter. One moment you bally well ask me to 'pipe the blighter,' and then you nudge one and ask one if one 'saw the bear-cat,' but it's coming it a bit too thick, old man, to ask one if one sees a bull on—er—Tremont street."

"I'm not throwing any bull; it's a bull, and he's giving you the lamp."

Fancy, dear old man—a blighted bull presenting a person with a lamp! Humour, what?

Extraordinary idea, what?

"Don't be a bonehead," said Breezer, don't you see that bull, that policeman, giving you the up and down?"

"Oh," said I, "you mean the crusher that's looking at us." Imagine, if you can, old man, a country where the blighters call a crusher a bull! Extraordinary, I call it.

"You haven't been forging any checks, have you, or playing any little pranks of that kind?" asked Breezer.

You know, old chap, there have been a few shady transactions over here—I mean over there, in dear old London—in which my motives, I fear, may have been misunderstood. A gentleman can't be expected to know all the bally details of business like a clerk or a greengrocer, and so long as I jolly well got the oof I didn't trouble myself much with anything else. But of course, you know perfectly well, old chap, that I would never stoop to anything so vulgar as forgery. Nevertheless, I was really quite gratified when the crusher moved in the opposite direction.

"Ah," said I to Breezer, "your friend is picking up his plates of meat."

Breezer looked at me blankly. "Yes," said I, "he's picking up his plates of meat—he's hoofing it away, the blighter."

"Plates of meat," Breezer muttered thickly.

The ignorant rotter didn't know that "plates of meat" means feet. Fact, 'pon my word."

By the bye, old fellow, they've got a rare old bloke down in Mexico City. He's a naughty old blighter, I give you my word. Name's Huerta, and he's president or some rot of that kind.

The old bird's only occupation is to get gloriously squiffed on brandy every night, and he's said to be no end of a success at it. In the morning he clogs his hands for his mount, and when the man comes in this Huerta person says, "A bit of brandy, Manuel."

"Si, senor," says Manuel and empties a couple of bottles of tenstar into a jug.

After tossing off this pick-me-up, jolly old Huerta says: "Did I send any bally telegrams last night, Manuel?"

"Si, senor. One to Washington defying the North Americans. One also to the Spanish Ambassador saying that should a word get spilled, but Spaniards were skunks."

"Trifles, Manuel, trifles. A bit of brandy now. Anything else?".

"You had the minister of war shot."

"Tut, tut, Manuel; too bad. I must have meant the minister of education. Another bottle of brandy. Ah, now I feel better. A regrettable error about the minister of war, Manuel, but mistakes will happen. See that I don't order any blasted executive tonight, Manuel; at least not after midnight."

Your old pal, PERCY.
